A LARGE SUM FOR PENSIONS

FIFTY MILLIONS APPROPRIATED BY THE PENSION BILL.

IMMENSE AMOUNTS INVOLVED BY THE ARREARAGES ACT—NEARLY 300,000 CLAIMS STILL UNSETTLED—THE SYSTEM OF PAYMENTS CRITICISED.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The House to-day passed the Pension bill, which is the second regular appropriation bill passed this week. The amount appropriated is $50,000,000, which large sum is made necessary by the arrears bill passed by the last Congress. Mr. Hubbell, who had charge of the bill, explained the operation and effect of the arrearage act, and showed that the amount for pensions would be increased annually for some time to come, in consequence of the large number of claims still unsettled and yet to be presented under that act. He made a statement as to the enormous amount of appropriations needed to pay the arrearages of pensions. When the bill for the arrears of pensions had been before the House, it had been stated that it would only require a few millions. Up to Nov. 1, 1880, the Government had paid out for arrearages alone $24,600,000. The average arrearages to each of the old pensioners had been found to be $560. At the date of the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, there had been 281,597 claims pending, and the average arrears in each new claim was $1,100. Supposing that 30 per cent. of those claims would be disallowed, there would still be, in round numbers, 197,000 arrearages to be paid, which, at the rate of $1,100 each, would amount to $217,000,000, and he wished to call attention to the further fact that the average age of the pensioners of the Government was only 41 years. He criticised the present system of paying pensions. Under this system anybody could get a pension who was willing to take a false oath. The Commissioner had told him that out of the $50,000,000 paid out each year, $4,000,000 was paid out fraudulently, and perhaps more. Mr. Sparks defended the act for the payment of arrears of pensions as a simple act of justice to the pensioner. Mr. Hubbell, in reply, stated that he had not in any way intended to oppose the arrearages bill. On the contrary, he acknowledged its justice, and he had merely tried to-day to show that under the present system the Government was liable, in carrying out that bill, to submit to great frauds.

It is to be hoped that the very expensive experience derived from the arrearage act will operate effectually to kill the scheme for equalization of bounties which has been maintained before Congress for several years, mainly through the influence and efforts of claim agents.

There are still two regular appropriation bills pending in the House—the Military Academy and Consular and Diplomatic—which the Committee on Appropriations will endeavor to have passed before the holiday adjournment. As to-morrow is devoted to the consideration of bills on the private calendar, it is not likely that anything further will be done with the appropriation bills until Monday, and if those bills should not be passed next week a vote on the Refunding bill will not be possible until about the middle of January.

HONORING GRANT IN CONGRESS.

THE EX-PRESIDENT GREETED IN BOTH THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—While Mr. Vest, of Missouri, was expressing a fear that the Burnside Education bill would interfere with the rights of the States, this afternoon at 3 o'clock, ex-President Grant entered the Senate Chamber from the cloak-room on the Republican side, accompanied by Senator Logan and Gen. Beale. At the appearance of this unassuming man, bearing so quietly such an accumulation of honors, some one in the gallery began to applaud. This enthusiasm was quickly suppressed. Gen. Grant was at once surrounded by Senators Ferry, Windom, Kirkwood, and others, who had been sitting near him. As soon as it became generally known that the ex-President was in the chamber, the other Republican Senators left their seats and paid their respects to him as he stood near the sofas in the corner. Mr. Edmunds then moved that a recess of 10 minutes be taken, in order that the Senators might pay their respects to the ex-President. This motion was unanimously carried. Thereupon a little reception was held in the Republican corner. Some of the best known of the Brigadiers were the first to shake the hand of the man who had led the Union forces against them. Other Democrats were not eager to approach him, but nearly all on that side of the chamber presented themselves before the recess was ended. It was reserved for such statesmen as Messrs. Vest, Slater, Vance, Jonas, and Walker to remain in their seats and refuse to greet the distinguished visitor.

The session having been resumed, the ex-President sat upon one of the sofas for a few minutes, talking with his friends, and then left the chamber. He also visited the House, where his presence was also recognized by a recess of 10 minutes. A few Democrats had the bad taste to vote against the motion. As soon as the motion had been passed the members gathered around the ex-President, who was in the rear of the room, and it was very difficult for any one to approach him except those who were in the centre of the group. Speaker Randall solved the problem by leading the ex-President down the aisle, and then presenting the members to him as they filed past. Five or six of the Democrats refused to be presented. When the session was resumed, the ex-President sat down in Mr. Chittenden's chair, which is in the front row, just in front of the Speaker.

The House adjourned soon after the recess, and the ex-President remained seated for a few minutes, chatting with members. On leaving the hall he walked through the Capitol to the Senate side, followed by a large crowd, and upon quitting the building was driven to the residence of Gen. Beale. He will leave here for New-York to-morrow.

ABATING WASHINGTON NUISANCES

RECLAMATION OF THE POTOMAC FLATS—BILL TO PREVENT WASTE OF WATER.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—At last the House Committee on the District of Columbia have shown some interest in one of the most important subjects for legislation which has been presented for their consideration. The committee voted to-day, 6 to 5, to secure, if possible, the insertion in the River and Harbor bill of a paragraph appropriating $1,950,000 for the improvement of the Potomac River and the so-called harbors of Washington and Georgetown. In this way it is proposed to begin the reclamation of the fever-breeding flats which lie in front of this city. The emphatic demands which have recently been made for the improvement of these flats have brought into existence a company which offers to do the work without other compensation than a gift of the land which will be reclaimed. The inexpediency of allowing the work to be done in this way ought to be plain to any Congressman, but those who are anxious for the immediate improvement of the flats fear that the necessary legislation may be delayed by these or other persons who are endeavoring to advance their own fortunes. If the land to be reclaimed is worth the cost of the work to private persons, it is worth as much to the Government.

Another step was taken to-day toward removing some of the causes of complaint which exist in the District, and which were recently described in THE TIMES. The Senate passed a bill to prevent the waste of public water by householders. This bill requires the Police of the city to inspect, without notice, premises where the Potomac water is used, and to report the residents to the Commissioners if they are allowing water to run to waste. There are provisions for shutting off water from such premises if the waste is not stopped within 48 hours, and the resident must pay $2 before he can get it again. The bill throws additional work upon a Police force which is now too small for effective service, and has some features which will make it unpopular with citizens.

EDUCATION IN THE SOUTH.

SENATE DEBATE ON BURNSIDE'S BILL—NEEDS OF THE SOUTH.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The debate upon the Burnside bill to apply the proceeds of the sale of public lands and the proceeds of patents to the education of the people was continued in the Senate to-day. It had been agreed that a vote should be taken at 4 o'clock, but the hour passed without any attempt being made to close the debate. It is probable that a vote will be reached to-morrow. The debate was begun yesterday by Mr. Burnside and Mr. Morrill, whose excellent speech was followed by a frank explanation of the condition of the South and its needs by Senator Brown, of Georgia.

Several Senators took part in the discussion to-day. Mr. Teller maintained that the aid should be given at once. This would involve a distribution of the principal of the proceeds, while the bill provides for an apportionment of the interest. Mr. Hoar opposed the views of Mr. Teller. Mr. Pugh, of Alabama, read his maiden speech, which, at least, had the merit of brevity. Mr. Pugh has a pleasing voice and a good delivery. His emphasis is well placed, and his enunciation is clear. He had a great deal to say about the necessity of preserving local self-government in the South, apparently forgetting that his party has almost wiped out local self-government in most of the Southern States, and he gave the hackneyed explanation for the South's solidity. All sectional troubles he ascribed to the North's ignorance of the real character of Southern whites, but he supported the bill, as did others, with the exception of Mr. Vest, who thought the States should be allowed to take care of education for themselves, and should not be called to account for any misapplication of money given to them by the general Government for educational purposes. Mr. Hill, of Georgia, supported the bill, but thought it did not give enough money. Mr. Morgan spoke for a long time in support of his amendment, which provides that the colleges aided shall establish schools for the instruction of females, "in such branches of technical education as are suitable to their sex." There must have been some persons in the galleries whose lives had been shortened by the abominations of Southern cooking, and these could not have failed to agree with him as to the necessity of establishing cooking schools in the South. Mr. Morgan thinks that the free education of women in certain branches would keep away those who come here and throw themselves upon the charity of Congressmen for the purpose of getting clerkships. He says the city is flooded with them.

THE VIRGINIA COUPON CASE.

ARGUMENTS IN THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The case of Hartman against Greenhow was argued to-day in the United States Supreme Court. This is a case of unusual importance and will probably have a controlling effect upon the politics of the State of Virginia. By the Funding act of 1871, Virginia issued bonds, with interest coupons attached, which, according to their face, are receivable in payment of taxes. Several measures have been at different times resorted to by the State Legislature to escape the obligation of these coupons, but they have been invariably pronounced unconstitutional and void by the Virginia Court of Appeals. In 1876, however, the Legislature passed a law imposing a tax upon the bonds, and requiring the State officers to deduct this tax from the coupons when tendered in payment of taxes. The Court of Appeals sustained this law and the bondholders carried the case to the Supreme Court. Mr. William L. Royall, formerly of Richmond, but now of New-York City, argued the case for the bondholders, and the Attorney-General of Virginia for the other side. Those who favor an honest payment of the debt of Virginia contend that a decision in this case favorable to them will kill the Readjuster Party in that State. The fight now, on the part of the Readjusters, is to turn out the present Court of Appeals and put in other Judges who will hold that the State is not bound to receive the coupons in payment of taxes. If the Supreme Court decides that the State shall redeem the coupons, it will be very much like notice to the Readjusters that it will undo the work their new Judges may do. The debt-payers say that it will be impossible to organize a party against the decree of the Supreme Court, and Virginians are awaiting the result of the case with great interest.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16, 1880.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $535,115 35, and from Customs, $719,486 45.

The Electoral vote of the State of Tennessee was delivered to Vice-President Wheeler to-day by a special messenger.

The Treasury Department to-day purchased 200,000 ounces of fine silver for delivery at the San Francisco and New-Orleans Mints.

The House adopted a concurrent resolution to-day providing for a recess of Congress from Dec. 22 to Jan. 5. In the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Gen. O. O. Howard, who has been assigned to the command of the West Point Military Academy, has left for California to settle his private affairs, preparatory to entering upon his new duties.

The Secretary of the Treasury to-day received from an unknown person, in an envelope post-marked Newark, N. J., the sum of $200. The money has been deposited in the Treasury on account of conscience.

Mr. Bland, of Missouri, obtained permission to-day to have printed in the Record a substitute which he proposes to offer for the Funding bill. It appropriates of the coin now in the Treasury the sum of $100,000,000 for the payment of the interest-bearing debt of the United States falling due during 1880 and 1881, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be coined the maximum amount of silver dollars in the manner now authorized by law, and to pay out such dollars in the redemption of the public debt. Section 9 repeals all laws authorizing the issuing of bonds for the purpose of funding or redeeming the interest-bearing debt of the United States.

An informal caucus of the Greenback members of the House of Representatives was held in the room of the Agricultural Committee at the Capitol to-day. The main object of the meeting was to devise methods for extending their party organization throughout the country, and to decide upon a plan of united action in opposition to the pending Funding bill. The line of action to be pursued in regard to other important measures now pending before the House of Representatives, which they may endeavor to bring before it, such as inter-State commerce, the national bank question, and unlimited coinage of silver, were also considered. No action was reached to-day, and the caucus adjourned, after authorizing Gen. Weaver to call another meeting, which will probably be held within a few days.

MINSTRELS IN TROUBLE.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Dec. 16.—A minstrel company, billed as Skiff and Gaylord's Minstrels, was to appear here this evening at the Academy of Music. Some of the actors refused to play until they had received their back pay. Gaylord, the proprietor, refused, and left the box-office, and has not yet reappeared. The audience became impatient and vainly demanded their money back, and a mob attacked the ticket agent in the street. Most of the members of the company are at their hotel with no means. The trouble is said to be backed by George Cooper.

THE LAND LEAGUE TYRANNY

DESPERATE OPPOSITION EXPECTED TO COERCIVE MEASURES.

THE ACTION OF THE CABINET ANXIOUSLY AWAITED BY LOYAL IRISHMEN—DANGERS OF HOLDING OFFICE—MR. JONES'S CATTLE—STRIKING A JURY FOR THE STATE TRIALS.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—A dispatch from Dublin says: "The action of the Cabinet in regard to the Irish question is awaited with intense anxiety by the loyal classes, but with affected indifference by the Land League and their sympathizers. The most strenuous and desperate opposition may be expected to coercion. All that physical endurance can do to prevent the suspension of the Habeas Corpus act may be anticipated. Some members of the Irish party in Parliament, who do not approve of the League, will make common cause with them in their struggle, knowing that it will be an easy way to atone for shortcomings and attain popularity without directly committing themselves to the policy of the League. The organs of the League affect to disbelieve that the Cabinet is resolved on coercion. One paper contends that crime is no more prevalent now than it was a month ago, and that if the Government adopts coercion now after refusing to do so before, it would be regarded as a tardy acknowledgment of error."

The Times publishes a letter from the authorities at Dublin, to a person appointing him High Sheriff of a certain county for the year 1881, and the reply to the letter. The reply states that the person declines the appointment, because, owing to the state of the country, his rental is so diminished that he cannot afford the expenses of the office; adding that, the Government having allowed the country to verge on a state of anarchy and rebellion, the responsibilities and dangers of the office are more than he is willing to incur.

A correspondent at Dublin says: "The military authorities have collected camp requisites at certain stations all over the country, and the commissariat has accumulated a reserve of portable provisions in every town."

Orders were issued to-day for the Second Battalion of the Rifle Brigade, expected home from Malta, to land at Queenstown, instead of proceeding to England.

The Cabinet was in session four hours to-day.

One hundred and nineteen men of the Cold-Stream Guards have started for Dublin.

There will be a large meeting of Irishmen at Manchester on Wednesday to express sympathy for the traversers and augment the defense fund. Mr. Parnell will be present.

A great anti-League meeting was held to-day at Monaghan, Lord Rossmore presiding. Resolutions were passed declaring an equitable settlement of the land question absolutely necessary—a settlement giving landlords fair rent and tenants protection from rack rents and capricious eviction.

DUBLIN, Dec. 16.—Of the panel of 24 jurors struck to-day for the trial of the traversers, 14 are Liberals, and 10 Conservatives. Each side will drop 6, thus reducing the number to the requisite 12.

The cattle belonging to Mr. William Bence Jones, of Lisslane, which were forwarded from Cork by the Great Western Railway, having been refused shipment by the steamship companies in consequence of the threats of the "Boycotters," have not yet left Dublin.

TORONTO, Ontario, Dec. 16.—A special cable dispatch from London to the Globe says: "Emigration forms a part of the Government's programme for dealing with Ireland. It is probable numbers of Irish of a fair class of settlers will be sent to the North-west at the expense of the British Government."

LONDON, Dec. 17.—Mr. Forster, Chief Secretary for Ireland, has gone to Dublin.

Mr. Parnell has issued a circular altering the date of the meeting of the Home Rule Party from Jan. 4 to Dec. 27, the day before the State trials begin.

The Grand Orange Lodge has determined to make every exertion to relieve Mr. Jones. His sheep were shipped to Liverpool yesterday without opposition, and the horned cattle will be shipped to-day.

A troop-ship has been ordered to get ready immediately to go to Gibraltar for the purpose of conveying the Ninety-seventh Regiment thence to Queenstown.

A correspondent at Dublin says it is reported that a movement is afoot in Ulster to send a relief expedition to Mr. Jones, at Bandon.

The Times, in its leading editorial, says: "The situation in Ireland is one of deepening gloom. The officers of the Government look on while lawlessness is unchecked. But this cannot continue. At some point the will of rebels against society must be broken by the force of society. If the Government does not step forward to resume its functions, we shall see the calamity of a spontaneous struggle between those who set up their own will as the law and those who resist such coercion. It must be plain to the Government that the evil has grown to its present dimensions because it has been slow to understand and to execute its duty."

The News in its leading article states that yesterday's sitting of the Cabinet, which will probably be the last before Christmas, was occupied in the consideration of the Land bill. It is not absolutely certain that the bill will be ready to present to the House at the opening of the session in all its details, but the principles and objects of the measure will be stated as early as possible. The News positively denies that the Land bill and a coercion bill will be introduced simultaneously. The Government will let Parliament fully understand what remedial legislation they intend to propose before they carry through measures of coercion.

CHILIANS ADVANCING ON LIMA.

A LANDING EFFECTED AT PISCO—PERUVIANS PREPARING TO RESIST THE INVADERS.

PANAMA, Dec. 6.—The long expected Chilian advance on Lima is at last a reality. On Nov. 19, 18 vessels, all war vessels or armed transports, except four sailing vessels, which were towed, appeared off Pisco. The Angamo and two other vessels steamed into the harbor, the former approaching the mole as closely as possible and sent an officer ashore, who demanded the surrender of the place, and was refused. Fire was at once opened from the three ships and was returned by the Peruvian force on shore. This force consisted of only 1,200 men, commanded by Col. Zamudi. The landing at Pisco was resisted so hotly that most of the Chilians landed at Paracas, about 10 miles off, and immediately marched on Pisco, almost surrounding Zamudi's small force. That officer, hopeless of further defense without the sacrifice of his entire force, retired after blowing up the shore section of the wharf, and destroying other property to prevent its falling into Chilian hands. The rolling stock of the Pisco Railroad was burned, a severe loss to the English bondholders. The Peruvian loss in the fight is placed at 150 men, and the Chilian at thrice that number. The Chilian force landed consisted of the Second and Fourth Regiments, of 1,200 men each, the Coquimbo, Talca, Colchagua, Chabuco, and Atacama Regiments, of 1,200 men each; the Naval Brigade of 900 men, and 800 artillery and cavalry, making in all 10,000 men. The transports, having landed the troops, returned to Arica, for further reinforcements, which will be landed nearer Lima, probably at Cerro Azul, and thence move on the capital. Pisco is 126 miles from Lima, and 70 from Cerro Azul. The force landed at Pisco will probably destroy all towns in the Yca Valley, and then enter the Cañete Valley, which they will probably make their base of operations. The march to Lima will be resisted step by step. To this end three divisions left Lima on the night of Nov. 19. They have with them 85 pieces of artillery. Every post of advantage will be occupied, and the advance harassed and opposed to the utmost. The road the invaders have to traverse is particularly unfavorable for such purposes, abounding in ravines and passes, easily defensible by a resolute soldiery, and affording almost certainly numerous opportunities for administering checks to the invaders. The force lately landed has not yet begun its advance, though a battalion of Chilian cavalry was reported on the road 18 miles from Pisco.

The port of Ancon has been open several weeks, and many families are availing themselves of this opportunity of leaving Lima. Five thousand tons of freight are awaiting shipment. The Pacific Steam Navigation Company's steamers are making extra trips to Chimbote to carry away the extraordinary traffic there offering before the Chilians resume the blockade. The port will soon be reclosed.

THE GREEK BOUNDARY.

A FRESH PROPOSAL FROM TURKEY—COLLECTIVE ACTION BY EUROPE PROBABLE.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—The Porte's latest note on the Greek question proposes as a basis of negotiation the proposal made by the Porte in its note of Oct. 3, namely, that the cession of territory should not include Janina, Metsova, and Larissa. This proposal has been hitherto utterly scouted by Greece.

A dispatch from Constantinople says: "The Porte in a note states that the military preparations of Greece have been pushed forward until the whole country is one vast camp; that the press inflames the people by violent articles against Turkey; that brigandage is carried on on a large scale, and formidable bands cross the frontier, but that the Porte will remain calm, while taking precautions against possible attacks."

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 16.—It is stated that the Ambassadors here will be instructed to reply collectively to the Turkish note on the Greek question.

PARIS, Dec. 16.—The Temps, replying to the article in the London Times of this morning on the Greek question, maintains that the French proposals, having been accepted by the powers, now become European proposals. It consequently appertains to the whole of Europe to determine upon collective action. England took the initiative in the negotiations for effecting the execution of the Berlin treaty. It is therefore England, and not France, that should advance proposals for the settlement of the Greek question.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—A correspondent at Vienna says it is believed that the idea of European arbitration in the Greek question, even if seriously proposed, would not have the slightest chance of realizing the end contemplated.

A ROYAL MARRIAGE POSTPONED.

THE CROWN PRINCE OF AUSTRIA NOT TO BE MARRIED IN FEBRUARY.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—A dispatch from Pesth says: "The marriage of the Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria with the Princess Stephanie of Belgium, which was fixed for February, has been postponed until warmer weather out of consideration for the state of the bride's health."

VIENNA, Dec. 16.—The Emperor and the Crown Prince Rudolph have declined a ball at the Opera-house tendered by the city of Vienna, on the occasion of the marriage of the Crown Prince, and have requested that the money intended to be appropriated for that entertainment shall be given to the poor of Vienna, at the same time offering liberal contributions themselves for the same purpose. This is the result of a scandal created by the Town Council appointing a committee to investigate rumors that the Crown Prince had ordered furniture and household equipments for his new establishment from Paris, the appointment of the committee being accompanied by severe comments by the members of the Municipal Council on the royal family patronizing foreign tradesmen. The inquiry showed these rumors to be false, and at the moment when the committee was making a report to that effect a letter was received from the Minister President of the Imperial Council informing the Burgomaster that the Emperor and Crown Prince must decline the city's hospitality.

The lower house of the Reichrath has agreed to the proposed Government loan of 13,500,000 florins.

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

BERLIN, Dec. 16.—A bill has been submitted to the Federal Council authorizing the issue of a Government loan of 54,000,000 marks for the naval, military, and postal services.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 16.—The Chinese Ambassador to-day had a five hours' conference at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, which is believed to have been mutually satisfactory.

ROME, Dec. 16.—In the last consistory the Pope formally announced the appointment of Cardinal Jacobini to be Secretary of State and Administrator of the property of the Vatican.

The Pope has issued an encyclical letter exhorting the Patriarchs, Archbishops and Bishops of the Catholic world to stimulate their flocks to pray, work, and contribute in aid of the Apostolic foreign missions as represented by the work of the societies for the propagation of the faith and the schools in the East.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Mr. Philip Callan, member of Parliament for Louth, who was convicted of libeling Mr. A. M. Sullivan, has been sentenced to pay a fine of £50.

Mr. John J. Mechi, the well-known agriculturist and razor-strop maker, has failed. His liabilities are estimated at £13,000. His assets comprise stock at Tiptree Hall to the value of about £2,700.

A dispatch from Paris says: "Of the effect the recent disclosures regarding Henri Rochefort, in connection with the Commune, will have on his followers, it is too sudden to judge. The Socialist papers defend him, but rather languidly. The Bonapartist organs side with him."

Mr. James Cropper, Liberal, a banker, has been elected to the House of Commons from Kendal, to fill the vacancy caused by the death last month of Mr. John Whitwell. Mr. Cropper defeated his opponent, Mr. Harris, Conservative, by 300 votes.

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 16.—The Basutos were repulsed at Dordrecht on the 10th inst. with great loss.

PARIS, Dec. 16.—M. Reinach, Gambetta's secretary, has challenged M. Rogat, of the Pays, who has taken up the defense of Henri Rochefort.

The Intransigeant publishes a letter from Louise Michel denying that she ranks Rochefort as a traitor.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg states that Russia intends to take decisive action against the Turcomans at the end of December.

A dispatch from Vienna reports that 20 arrests have been made in connection with the attempted assassination of Premier Bratiano.

A dispatch from Lisbon says Dr. Amado has gone to New-York as Commissioner of Portugal to the Sanitary Congress at Washington.

A dispatch from Bucharest states that Mr. Eugene Schuyler, the United States Charge d'Affaires, at a private audience with Prince Charles presented an autograph letter of President Hayes congratulating the Prince on the independence of Roumania, and expressing fervent wishes for the prosperity of the Principality. The Prince made an appropriate reply.

NEW-JERSEY PROHIBITIONISTS.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 16.—The State Prohibition Party met in State convention in this city yesterday, and is now holding sessions. The object is to make a more compact party organization in the State and to separate from all other party organizations.

INCREASED DEMAND FOR WHISKY.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 16.—The whisky men of Louisville report an immense increase of business this year over all others in the past. Some firms have contracted to sell all they can produce for as long ahead as 1882. The demand has more than doubled. In addition to the increase of capacity of the present distilleries of Kentucky, the State now has nearly twice as many as formerly, while other firms are talked of. Several firms hitherto merely wholesale dealers are now distilling. The demand comes from the North-west in the main, although the East and South are also well represented. The force of store-keepers and gangers has been increased to keep up with the additional manufacture.

FITZ JOHN PORTER'S CASE

GEN. GRANT'S JUDGMENT UPON THE MANASSAS AFFAIR.

HIS SEVERE LANGUAGE IN REFUSING TO REOPEN THE CASE—HOW PORTER MIGHT HAVE PROVED HIS LOYALTY.

NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 16.—At the time of Gen. Grant's visit to this city last Spring the case of Fitz John Porter was occupying the attention of the United States Senate in the form of a bill for his relief. Senators Carpenter and Logan had attacked the bill, and it was naturally a topic of conversation among military men, as it is now since its revival in the Senate. It occurred to me that the views of Gen. Grant on the subject might be not only interesting but valuable, and I took occasion to secure them. As his friends were urging him for the Republican nomination, it was not regarded as well to stir up the friends of Porter, and Gen. Grant's opinions were not published. At this time, however, there can be no impropriety in giving the pith of his remarks on a subject which is familiar to him and on which he is, as a military man, most competent to speak. As the successful commander of the Eastern army and as President he had exceptionally good opportunities to get at the merits of the case. The conversation in which Gen. Grant expressed his views was not in the form of an interview, and he did not go into the details of the case, but simply gave his conclusions, reached after a thorough consideration of the new Confederate evidence on which is based Porter's plea for relief. The conversation sprang from a comment on Carpenter's speech and followed a question as to the propriety of President Hayes's action in giving the case a rehearing.

"Soon after my inauguration the first time," said Gen. Grant, "one of Porter's intimate friends came to me and urged me to take steps for a reopening of his case. He brought with him a mass of documents which, it was claimed, would show Porter's action in a better light. I took the papers and went through them. When he called again for an answer, I told him that when I urged a reopening of that case I would also urge the hanging of Porter. That's the last I heard of the case. They waited until Hayes got in before they brought up their new evidence again. I had another case of the same kind. An officer of the Twenty-first Illinois, the regiment I first took command of, was dismissed the service, and as soon as I was elected President he came to me to have his case retried. He didn't get it, but I see he has been successful since then. I haven't much sympathy with a man who staid at home after being dismissed as an officer, and then, after the war is over, comes in with a claim for pay. If he should enlist after being dismissed I might think he was a patriot."

What Gen. Grant said in connection with the commission which tried Gen. Porter was new to the writer, but may not be so to others who are more familiar with the details of the case or whose memory is more tenacious. "That commission," he stated, "was composed of conservative men. I doubt if an equal number of prominent officers less likely to be unjustly severe could be found in the Army. They were men more disposed to be merciful than severe. After going into all the details and sifting all the evidence, they concluded Gen. Porter should be shot. There was no difference of opinion among them on the question. It was unanimous. President Lincoln was responsible for the modification of sentence. He interceded in behalf of Porter, not for Porter's sake, but as a matter of public policy. He wrote to the commission urging them to spare Porter's life. The feeling in the Army of the Potomac at that time was such that Mr. Lincoln was afraid of the effect of the execution of an officer of Porter's rank. So the commission dismissed him from the service with loss of pay, although they believed the evidence warranted a more severe punishment."

As to the Confederate evidence which has been urged in Porter's interest, Gen. Grant said: "This is the evidence of the enemy, and amounts to this, that if Porter had gone into the fight he would have been whipped. That sort of evidence is not worth a great deal. You can always prove by a General that he would have won in a fight that never took place. Many a General who was sure of success has been whipped. An enemy may be able to see flaws in a General's plans that he does not see. The confidence of the enemy that they could have whipped Porter is no excuse for Porter's failure to fight."

Gen. Grant did not know whether it was fair to say Porter was a traitor. He knew him at West Point, and their relations had always been friendly, and he had no reason to doubt Porter's loyalty up to the time he felt he was not appreciated by the Administration. "It did not look well," he said, "for Porter to stay out of the war after his dismissal. As his loyalty was in question, he would have done well to vindicate it by going into the Army as a private, if he could go in no other way. The country needed the services of every able-bodied man. Porter staid at home, and now comes forward, years after, and asks for pay. If a man loves his country, he will serve it when in danger; and if he can't be a General he will be a private soldier!"

While I have used quotation marks pretty liberally in this, I do not pretend to give it as a verbatim report of the conversation—but it is correct in substance. I believe it agrees with the views of most military men who have given the case attention. At various Army reunions in the West I have heard the matter commented on, and have yet to hear any volunteer officer in the West approve of any measure for the relief of Fitz John Porter. The general feeling is that he owes his life to the circumstances which made it appear injudicious to enforce the highest penalty.

STUDENT RIOT IN PHILADELPHIA.

A QUARREL BETWEEN SOPHOMORES AND MEDICAL STUDENTS — POLICEMEN INJURED AND COLLEGE BOYS ARRESTED.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 16.—The Sophomore Class of the University of Pennsylvania had a cremation to-night of the old text-books used during the past term. The cremation exercises occurred on the Campus, and the students arrived on the spot about 9:30 o'clock, accompanied by an escort of 30 policemen, as it had been hinted during the day that the medical students would break up the exercises for an alleged affront given at their Commencement last Summer. When the Sophomores, to the number of 50, arrived on the ground, they found a gathering of several hundred medical students, who shouted and hooted at the Sophomores. Several breaks in the rope which surrounded the Sophomores were made, and then a policeman discharged his pistol. This was the cause of a general rush of the students, and the policemen were nearly overpowered. They then made an arrest, and this led to the throwing of bricks, rotten eggs, and other things, and several of the policemen were injured, one seriously by being struck on the head with a brick. Another claims to have been cut across the head with a knife by a student. Ten of the medical students were arrested, and three of the policemen were sent to the hospital. The affair caused intense excitement in West Philadelphia, and the people in the neighborhood were fearful that the riot would become general and lead to the destruction of property. At midnight matters had calmed down.

WHY A CHINAMAN KILLED HIMSELF.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—Ole Yung, a Chinese laundryman, at No. 44 North Clark-street, this city, committed suicide this morning by swallowing poison. He was a noted gambler and opium-eater. The cause of the suicide is said to have been financial losses incurred through indulgence in the American game of draw poker.

A SPIRITUALISTIC DIFFICULTY.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 16.—William R. Tice, who resides at No. 326 Bedermerhorn street, Brooklyn, to-day instituted a criminal prosecution against Jonathan Roberts for libel. Roberts is the publisher of a Spiritualistic paper, printed in this city, called Mind and Matter, and assailed Tice in the issue of March 6, 1879. In general terms the prosecutor stated that the publication was libelous and defamatory. Mr. Roberts was held for trial. Mr. Tice, who is a retired jeweler, was arrested this evening at the instance of James, the medium, charging him with defamation of character and assault during a séance. Mr. Tice entered bail.

CRIME AND ITS RESULTS.

OFFENSES REPORTED YESTERDAY—PROCEEDINGS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

BATAVIA, N. Y., Dec. 16.—A sad case of homicide occurred in this village last night. Frederick L. Jackson, 43 years old, shot his wife fatally with a revolver while both were in bed. Jackson was kicked in the head by a horse Tuesday, and since that time has at intervals been insane. His sympathizers claim he was in a fit of insanity when he committed the crime, while others believe he was rational and the deed was intentional. Jackson is under the surveillance of Sheriff's officers pending an investigation.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 16.—Advices from Indian Territory say that two full-blooded Indians went to the house of Elias McVeigh, in Eufaula, on Tuesday, and, after accepting the hospitalities of Mr McVeigh, shot and killed him, and chopped a hired man named Barrett with an axe, inflicting mortal wounds.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—A dispatch from Carrollton, Ill., says a farmer named John C. Armstrong got into a dispute with Clinton Armstrong to-day about a wagon, which ended in the latter picking up a neck-yoke and striking him on the side of the head with it, crushing in his skull and causing death in two hours. The men were not relatives. The homicide was arrested. He had hitherto borne a good character.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 16.—The motion for a new trial in the case of Dr. Albert G. F. Goersen, convicted of murder in the first degree, in having poisoned his wife, was overruled this morning and the prisoner was sentenced to death.

BOSTON, Dec. 16.—John Dearing was examined to-day on a charge of causing the death of Michael Ruse, on Monday night, by drowning, and held in $5,000 bail for further examination on Saturday.

Lewis B. Follette, under arrest on a charge of causing the death of Rebecca Long, by malpractice, was arraigned to-day at Wakefield, Mass. He pleaded not guilty, and was remanded to jail in default of $10,000 bail. The case will be heard at Malden on Dec. 23.

HOUSTON, Dec. 16.—Riley Tomlin, on Friday last, shot and killed one Carr, and wounded another man, 20 miles hence, on the narrow gauge road. The men, all colored, were engaged in cutting wood.

A dispatch from Dallas says Wiley Stewart, one of the murderers of Mr. Jones in the Indian Territory, at Caddo, Oct. 3, 1879, was identified on Thursday at the convict camp of the Texas Pacific Road. He is serving a term under the name of Franklin Hale, for horse-stealing.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Dec. 16.—Frank Twiggs, colored, was convicted in the Burke County Superior Court to-day of the murder of William Driscoll, a white man, in November last. Twiggs shot Driscoll while the latter was asleep. Two brothers of Twiggs, who assisted in the crime, will also be tried.

HONESDALE, Penn., Dec. 16.—The Bortree trial is nearly finished, and the interest is increasing as it draws to a close. Edwin F. Uhl, a prominent Michigan lawyer, and Henry M. Seeley, for the defense, spoke all the afternoon. The case probably will go to the jury in the morning.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 16.—Henry Williams, who was found by the road-side near Ludlow, Ky., last night, with severe wounds on his head, caused by an iron bar, died to-day. It is clear now that it was a case of most unprovoked murder for the purpose of robbery. Williams was on his way to the city to buy a dress for his mother, having in his possession a twenty-dollar and a five-dollar gold piece. These were neither with him when found. To-day a negro named Gibson or Hicks was arrested on suspicion. Last night after the murder he bought a pair of boots and paid for them with a twenty-dollar gold piece. He had the old shoes and one of Williams's to-day were found blood and hair, the hair being similar to Williams's in color. Much feeling exists as Gibson is a man of worthless character, and Williams was an estimable young man.

SARNIA, Ontario, Dec. 16.—Dudley, of New-York, arrested a few weeks ago for smuggling jewelry into Canada, pleaded guilty, and was to-day sentenced to three months in jail.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16.—Brand, an American fugitive, was last night forcibly abducted from Hemmingford, in this Province, by three men, who placed him in a sleigh and took him to Plattsburg, N. Y.

THE RECORD OF ACCIDENTS.

DEATHS AND INJURIES FROM MANY CAUSES REPORTED YESTERDAY.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16.—At St. Henri village, to-day, while several men were taking down a large wooden and brick house, the whole structure gave way and men, bricks, and timbers were thrown together in a confused mass. A workman named Taylor was taken out dead, with both arms and one leg broken and his body terribly bruised. Connelly or Leblanc was injured internally, besides receiving several scalp wounds and bruises about the head. Several other persons were slightly injured.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Dec. 16.—Samuel Cunningham, a freight conductor on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, fell between two cars this morning and had both legs cut off. His death was instantaneous.

SPRINGFIELD, N. J., Dec. 16.—Last night a man, who was afterward identified as William Whitney, of New-Albany, was struck by a train near Scotch Plains and instantly killed.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Dec. 16.—A party of laborers, engaged in cutting ice on the canal in this village, to-day found the body of a man frozen fast to the under side of the ice. A letter was found on him addressed to Morris O'Sullivan, Soldiers' Home, Bath, N. Y. The body has been in the water a long time, and has not yet been identified.

ELORA, Ontario, Dec. 16.—James Arkell, Town Counselor, had a leg torn from his body at the saw mill here this morning. He cannot recover.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., Dec. 16.—Yesterday Sidney Tucker and wife, colored, living on the premises of Charles Leath, in Prince George County, locked their two children in the house and went out to pick peas. During their absence the building accidentally caught fire and was entirely consumed. The two children perished in the flames. On returning home Tucker and his wife found the house in ruins and the skull of the eldest child the only evidence left of their children.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire which occurred last evening in a two-story extension in the rear of the molding mill of Ehrhard, Hagen & Co., No. 115 East Thirteenth-street, caused a loss of $2,000. Lawson & Williams, manufacturers of gas fixtures and bronzes, who occupy the second and third floors of the front building, sustain a loss of $1,000, and Charles Jackson, manufacturer of silk trimmings, on the fourth floor, loses $1,000, chiefly by water. The building, which is owned by Grote & Co., was damaged to the extent of $800.

A STORMY OCEAN VOYAGE

CROSSING THE ATLANTIC IN A HURRICANE.

THE RAGE OF WINDS AND SEAS—ALARM OF THE PASSENGERS—A SAILOR LOST OVERBOARD—ENGLISH QUESTIONS—IRELAND AND THE GOVERNMENT.

LONDON, Nov. 29.—If you are not what is called "a good sailor," always cross the Atlantic in the biggest and quickest ship. At the moment her name is the Arizona. How soon she will be eclipsed by some newer steamer is only a matter of time. We live in an age of such rapid progress that every advancing step in machinery is only a question of days and months. The onward movement is sure to be made sooner or later. How we slipped our anchor one fine morning with tender good-byes in our ears; how the morning broke brightly; how the flowers in our state-room were fresh and glowing; how the Arizona steamed away through a calm sea day and night; how the second morning dawned as hopefully and as fair as the first; how it was all like a sweet dream; this I remember as parallel with the idea of the pleasant opening of a man's life. That was how we started from New-York bound for Liverpool on the 16th of November. On the third day came indications of storm, and before night the storm itself. Henceforward, day after day, night after night, we found we had a companion on the deep, a companion going northward by our side. It was a hurricane. In the day we could see it. In the night we could feel it. Capt. Murray gave it as wide a berth as possible. But it would not accept "the cold shoulder." It would travel with us. Now and then it would take our arm, as it were, and its grip was the grip of a treacherous enemy. We staggered under it. Brace ourselves as we might, the hurricane had a forty-fold strength compared with ours. Idealizing and personifying the traveling storm, we might have seen in it that roaring monster seeking whom it might devour, identical with "the very devil himself." Happily, we generally had the wind behind or across our quarter. That, coupled with the strength of our ship and the experience of our Captain, was our safety; for now and then it blew from every quarter, blew great guns. At one time our mainsail would go, her blocks and ropes coming thundering upon deck. At another time our trysail would be seen in ribbons, the wind screaming among the ragged tatters. Then the sea would break over us with a roar, like the bursting of ten thousand reservoirs. The ocean was white with foam. It had now and then the appearance of being covered with delicate white lace. It made mountains of itself, line upon line, hill upon hill, snow-clad and torrent-beaten! It was as if the sea had broken itself up into a vast company of liquid mountains, all engaged in a conspiracy to overcome and engulf the ship. It was a picture of courage and manliness to see the crew at work fighting the waves, to see the brave first officer heading them in every difficult operation, now in the rigging, now on the yards, now aloft, now below, the Captain cool and collected, directing every operation. More than once the storm assumed such alarming proportions that the faces of old travelers were blanched. All day on Sunday they sang hymns in the smoking-room, except when they sang and prayed at the service held by Bishop Niles in the saloon. Not that there was any morbid fear or alarm among the passengers; only a manly recognition of the tremendous power of the gales through which we were steaming. In the height of the fiercest squall of the voyage we lost a poor fellow from the yards and six others were badly hurt. As if the spirit of the storm had been appeased by the sacrifice of a life, there was a lull for a time; but we did not get clear of the hurricane until we passed the misty outlines of the Irish coast and steamed into the Channel. Even within sight of Ireland we received such a rough welcome that we did not venture to call at Queenstown, but went straight ahead to our dock at Birkenhead, having, "in spite of wind and weather," made the fastest trip on record "from point to point"—that is, from the dock at New-York to the dock at Liverpool—eight days and four hours.

AFTER THE STORM.

When it was all over and the storm was only a memory, the smoke-room, the saloon, the deck became lively. Now and then recollections of the lost sailor would obtrude themselves. We had left him behind in the darkness. Had he a wife? No one knew. A sister? No one could tell. At all events, somebody must be dependent on his toil. Some one would be looking for him in Liverpool. Every person has a friend or companion, man, woman, or dog. So we commenced a subscription for the unknown mourner. Mr. Meaney, of the New-York Star, formed a committee for this object, and we collected $900. I remember that going out a child was born of poor parents in the steerage, and we raised $300 in the interest of the baby, which was to be christened "Arizona," and when it reaches the age of 18 is to find a certain sum lying at compound interest in a New-York bank. Having raised a fund for the family or dependents of the lost sailor, a committee was formed to present an address to the Captain and crew of the steamer touching their excellence of both, and recording the gratitude of the passengers for being safely piloted through the storm, and well cared for in regard to "creature comforts." On the day of our last dinner on board, Mr. Meaney, who had drawn up the address, read it amid much applause; I proposed its adoption, the Rev. Bishop Niles, of the Episcopal Church of the United States, seconded it; the passengers accepted it with a cheer, and the Captain received it in his cabin with becoming modesty. Then we lapsed into international compliments. The English proposed the toast of "The Americans;" they drank to the English; we sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Rule Britannia;" and at last glided into the mists and fogs of Liverpool, en route (the majority of us) for the mists and fogs of London.

LONDON AND NEW-YORK.

Despite the undoubted vastness of London, a wilderness of brick populated by over 4,000,000 of people, it looked dark, dingy, and small compared with New-York. The streets are better paved, but they looked muddier, then those of New-York. The houses appeared to be smaller, the thoroughfares narrower, the stores meaner. There is no street in London as picturesque as Broadway. There is no restaurant as bright (or as dear, thank goodness,) as Delmonico's. One misses the oyster saloons, the clean, luxurious-looking drug stores, the drowsy tinkling of the street car bells, the lucid atmosphere, the bright blue sky. The London poor are poorer than the New-York poor; the street arabs are more ragged and more numerous; the drunkards are drunker, and the crowds cruder than those of New-York. We are a great, grand City, with a splendid history, but Manhattan has many delightful features which London does not, and never can, possess. The atmospheric conditions of the metropolis are beginning to occupy the serious attention of scientists and governing bodies. If New-York burned soft, smoky coal, such as is in general use here, the blue sky would often be clouded. On calm days, when the currents of air above were comparatively quiet, you would have a curtain of smoke between you and the sun, and a shroud of "blacks" on your windows. Your natural atmosphere being clearer than ours, the nuisance could never become very serious, as it is in London, but it would be a trouble, nevertheless. With us it is often a positive plague; it is equal to that of the darkness which afflicted Egypt when Pharoah would not let the children of Israel go. The smoke combines with our fogs, the exhalations often of low lands on the Thames, and the result is horrible. This week a conference upon the subject has been held at the Cannon-Street Hotel between special committees of the National Health and Kyrle Societies. They propose to take action for mitigating "the evils resulting from the excessive production of smoke in and about the metropolis." In the grate of the room a fire of anthracite coal was burning, "to show that, with the aid of a 'blower,' this not easily ignited fuel may be utilized in ordinary English grates." The meeting was presided over by Dr. Ernest Hart, and a fund was opened for the purpose of making trials of various fuels, and conducting experiments with a view to reduce the production of smoke. The fogs of London become year by year more serious, and as the smoke of the metropolis is the chief cause of their density, this must necessarily be the case, since the growth of the population is as great in proportion as that of the new cities of the New World. There seems to be no limit to the spreading of London. It is going out day by day further afield, swallowing up towns and villages in its march, covering green meadows with new buildings, and only pausing now and then to bridge water-courses, and make new railways and new highroads. The London fog is not only a grave trouble in the metropolis, but now and then it has a habit of traveling into the country. It has been known to push its way before a gentle breeze as far as 20 miles, a moving mass of smoke and dirt, the flavor of which cannot be mistaken.

IRELAND AND THE GOVERNMENT.

To some persons it was a relief from vague apprehensions of trouble to learn that Parliament did not consider the condition of Ireland necessitated a Winter session. They found satisfaction in the announcement that the Government believe they require no further powers than they already possess. There are others, however, both Liberals and Conservatives, who blame the Government for not facing the difficulty with the legitimate weapon of the broadest constitutional authority for stamping out sedition. Lord Granville himself within the past 48 hours has described the situation in Ireland as "painful and disreditable," and as involving "a new and dangerous interference not only with proprietary rights, but with the liberty of the trading tenant, of the would-be tenant of the tradesman, and the working man." While, however, one set of people are congratulating themselves that there is to be no Winter session, and another is condemning the Government on that account, Mr. Gladstone has surprised both with the announcement that Parliament will meet on the 6th of January. This is a discreet compromise, and fits the condition of things far better than a meeting this month or next would have done. The trial of the Land League leaders will be commenced in the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, on Dec. 20, and it is surely well that Parliament should not resume business simultaneously with that event. The House would have been pestered with questions and probably with discussions bearing upon the cases. It will be awkward enough to have the trials running on into the January session, but the first strain of them will be over by the time Parliament is fairly at work. Meanwhile Lord Granville tells the Irish people that if there should be no great change for the better between now and Jan. 6 the Government will have "no choice but to ask Parliament for extraordinary powers which may be the best fitted to strengthen the hands of the administration at the particular emergency;" but while the Government will ask for this extension of authority, it will still devote itself to preparing the way, on sound principles, "for the future contentment of the people." Among the legislation foreshadowed in political gossip is the Land bill. A commission which has taken evidence on the subject has not yet reported, but it is believed that Mr. Gladstone inclines to what is called the "three Fs" scheme—"fixity of tenure, fair rents, and free sale." Mr. Parnell and his friends demand further concessions than this. Nothing less than an enactment for securing within a given time the proprietorship of their holdings to the peasant tenants will satisfy the leading Leaguers. It is certain that the land question will occupy the first serious attention of Parliament in the next session, though it is uncertain whether the report of the commission and other necessary details can be fairly before members until February. The state of affairs in Ireland is bad enough, but not half as bad as the cable dispatches which are sent to some of the American journals make out. While "sensational news" may for the moment tickle the palate of the reading public it must surely be a source of disappointment to find that the forecasts of "revolution and bloodshed" are not fulfilled, and that the violent disruption of the British Empire is as unlikely an occurrence now as it was when the Land Leaguers first suggested that the best use a landlord could be put to was as manure for the soil of his tenant. Ireland has grievances, nobody denies. So has Scotland. So have England and Wales. But they are not grievances that demand the interposition of guns and revolvers. Every Government for the last 50 years has honestly tried to help Ireland. None however, were so pledged to the duty of doing so as the present Liberal administration, and no Irish party ever made a greater mistake than the Parnell lot has made in not trusting to Mr. Gladstone, and giving him a fair chance, instead of hampering him with an incipient rebellion and a series of State prosecutions.

ST. LEO'S CHURCH FAIR.

AN EFFORT TO RAISE FUNDS TO COMPLETE THE NEW EDIFICE.

The fair in aid of the new Catholic Church of St. Leo, in Twenty-eighth-street, between Fifth and Madison avenues, has been in successful progress for eight days. There is a large attendance each evening, and the managers expect to reap a rich harvest before the fair closes on Christmas Eve. A large variety of useful and ornamental articles, including statuary, paintings, engravings, furniture, jewelry, and ladies' and gentlemen's wearing apparel is still on hand to be sold for the good object in view. Chief among the prizes is a team of bay horses, valued at $1,500, presented by Father Ducey; $1,000 in gold, the gift of a gentleman of the congregation; a magnificent broughamm; an elegant set of harness with the monogram of the winner will be engraved; a parlor suit of furniture, worth $300; a fur-lined lady's circular, valued at $400; a crayon portrait of Father Ducey, valued at $200; a dress sword, worth $100 for the most popular officer in the National Guard, and a gold-headed cane for the most popular member of the Young Men's Catholic Lyceum. The voting for the two last-mentioned prizes is exciting the liveliest interest. Col. Cavanagh, of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, heads the list with 66 votes. The voting on the cane has resulted, so far, in the casting of 158 votes for Mr. Martin Cassidy, President of the Lyceum; 126 for Mr. John Fulton, and 121 for Mr. J. J. Walsh. Mrs. John Power and Mrs. Neilson preside at table No. 1; Mrs. Barton, Mrs. Carney, Miss Kernan, (niece of Senator Lagan,) and Mrs. Thomas Francis Meagher, at table No. 2; Mrs. Nathaniel Jarvis, Jr., at table No. 3; Mrs. L. G. Thornton, at the Lyceum table, No. 4; Miss Emma Ethier and Miss Reed, at the Parish table, No. 5, and Mrs. Whittaker at table No. 6. The refreshment table is served by Delmonico. Among the well-known persons present last evening were Mr. Eugene Kelly, Mr. William Millard, Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, Mr. Nathaniel Jarvis, Jr., the Hon. J. K. Brady, Mr. W. H. Schubert, Dr. Strachan, and Mr. John Power.

St. Leo's Church is an elegant edifice, built of granite, in the Gothic style of architecture, and will cost when completed about $90,000. It will seat about 800 persons. Father Ducey, who was formerly pastor of St. Michael's Church, in Madison avenue, has worked very hard to build the new church, and its existence is due to his personal influence. The fair is the first appeal that has been made for outside assistance.

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVEN YEARS OLD.

Dr. John Doran, of No. 206 East Eighty-second-street, yesterday filed in the Bureau of Records the certificate of the death of Ellen Moriarty, of No. 1,524 Second-avenue, at the age of 111 years. Mrs. Moriarty was a native of Kilmallock, County Limerick, Ireland, and was the mother of nine children—eight sons and a daughter—six of whom survive her. Her husband died in Ireland many years ago, and her children emigrated to America. Thirty-five years ago, at the age of 76, she came to New-York, and has since lived with her children. Her eldest son, Patrick, at whose house she died, says he is 76 years of age, and that he has always heard that his mother was over 30 years of age when she married. Hence, the estimate that she had lived 111 years is substantiated. Those who knew her speak of her as sprightly and intelligent until near the time of her death, as many a younger woman. Until two years ago, when she became blind, she was unhappy unless at work, and since then she had taken almost the entire care of herself, paying great attention to the neatness of her person, for which she was always remarkable. She sometimes talked about her recollections of the Irish insurrection of 1798, but was generally averse to conversing on her earlier life. She will be buried to-morrow, the Rev. Father Dougherty, of St. Monica's, officiating.

CHEAPER TELEGRAPHY.

The Western Union Telegraph Company yesterday issued a general order reducing rates for messages to all points at which the American Union Company has offices, to meet the reduction already instituted by the latter company. The principal changes are as follows:

	Old Rate.	New Rate.
To New-Orleans, Atlanta, and Augusta	$1 00	$0 75
To Omaha	1 00	60
To St. Louis and Milwaukee	60	50
To Cincinnati and other Ohio points	50	40
To Richmond	50	30
To Pittsburg and Rochester	40	30
To Buffalo	40	25
To Syracuse	25	25

The reduction to corresponding points is in proportion to those above given. The rate to Albany, Boston, and Washington remains unchanged at 25 cents. No twenty-five-cent rates are affected by the order.

A LOCOMOTIVE FIREMAN SCALDED.

When the train drawn by engine No. 204, on the Second-avenue branch of the elevated railroad, reached the long curve in the track at the corner of Pearl-street and Coenties-slip, on the way up town, at 7:30 o'clock last evening the safety-valve of the locomotive exploded. A shower of hot water and steam burst upon the fireman, Frank B. Staples, scalding him badly on the face, neck, and arms. He was removed to the Chamber-street Hospital, where his wounds were pronounced serious, but not necessarily fatal. He is a single man, 26 years of age, and lives at No. 234 East Eighty-second-street. The accident occurred so near the starting-point on the road that the train was run back and another locomotive was substituted for the damaged one with but little loss of time.

CLARKE AND HIS CHAMBER

MR. L. M. BATES TELLS WHAT HE HAS SEEN OF IT.

THE ORIGIN OF HIS KNOWING CLARKE'S SCHEME—USING HIS NAME WITHOUT AUTHORITY—SENDING AN ATTORNEY AFTER CLARKE—REFUSAL OF THE CHAMBER TO DIE.

The American Chamber of Commerce, more commonly known as G. W. Chater Clarke, refuses to die without a struggle. The semi-annual meeting was called at the Hoffman House for Wednesday, Dec. 8, and this meeting, after a most exciting session, adjourned to last evening at 8 o'clock. At the appointed hour G. W. Chater Clarke failed to appear, but the following six gentlemen, who are determined to put an end to the mock Chamber of Commerce, were present: J. B. Crosby, W. A. Shepard, H. W. Bean, Dundas Dick, John F. Baker, and L. M. Bates, of the firm of Bates, Reed & Cooley, whose name has been used by Clarke without his authority. J. W. Bennett, the alleged Secretary of the "Chamber," bore in his hand a huge pile of newspapers and documents, to which he clung tightly until the proceedings were opened, and, as events proved, he had a surprise in store for the gentlemen present, the development of which prevented the summary ending of G. W. Charter Clarke's American Chamber of Commerce.

Chairman Crosby called the meeting to order at precisely 8 o'clock, and Dundas Dick then announced that he had seen Clarke during the day and urged him to be present to clear up the difficulties with which the Chamber was surrounded. Clarke replied that the meeting was "irregular," and that for that reason he could not condescend to honor it with his presence. After this explanation of Clarke's absence, Secretary Bennett said he had a statement to make before any business was transacted. This statement was the surprise in store for the six other gentlemen, and proved that G. W. Charter Clarke has not yet come to the end of his rope, so far as the American Chamber of Commerce is concerned. Mr. Bennett said that he had taken time to examine the constitution, and he now knew precisely who were members of the organization. Article X. of the constitution provides that seven members, one of whom shall be the President or one of the Vice-Presidents, shall constitute a quorum. Neither of these officers were present at the recent meeting, which was, therefore, irregular and illegal, and the present adjourned meeting, had, of course, no legal existence. Article II. of the constitution provides for the calling of special meetings upon the written requisition of 10 members. Such a requisition has been signed by H. Charles Ullman, Frederick Hollender, James Baker, G. Schirmer, Alfred E. Pallard, Gilman Collamore, F. J. Le Duc, Dwight Dwyer, Garland McNeil, and F. H. Mack, and in accordance with it a special meeting of the Chamber has been called for Wednesday, Jan. 5, at 7:30 o'clock, in the Hoffman House. In view of this fact, Mr. Bennett thought that the gentlemen had better go home.

The gentleman, however, had no idea of going home, at least until Mr. Bates had told his story of the unauthorized use of his name by Clarke. Mr. Dick asked Bennett if he was a member of the Chamber. "Yes, Sir," was the prompt answer, "but I was not a member when I made a loan, I have paid my $5 and signed the roll since then." "It is very strange, to say the least," said Mr. Dick, "that Clarke was not present at that meeting, knowing as he did that his presence was necessary to make a quorum. He was perfectly familiar with the by-laws and he knew that his absence was going to have precisely this effect. It looks very much as though he kept out of the room on purpose to place us in this position." "I am not Mr. Clarke's keeper," retorted Bennett. "I am not Mr. Bates's keeper to explain his connection with this Chamber, and what he claims to be the unauthorized use of his name on circulars calling for meetings. I want to say that I have seen the original proof-sheets of the circulars, and they bear his signature, certifying that they were right."

Dundas Dick—Why was the name of Mr. Bates attached to calls made by the Executive Council, when he is not, and never was, a member of that council?

Mr. Bennett—I tell you that I have seen the proof-sheets of that circular, and his initials in his own handwriting are there. He said it was all right; and that's my answer to your question.

It was evident that the Secretary's point was well taken as to the irregularity of the meeting, and the gentlemen present had the time in dispute. Mr. Shepard, in view of the fact that the meeting was no meeting, and the Chairman no Chairman, proposed that they immediately organize some kind of a meeting and elect Mr. Crosby Chairman. The suggestion of Mr. Shepard was acted upon, and Mr. Crosby was called upon Mr. L. M. Bates, asking him, especially, to state whether he did or did not appoint the committees which claim to have been originated by him. Mr. Bates, upon this invitation, arose and told his story in a clear, calm voice, and it was listened to with care.

"It was in June last, I think, that Mr. Clarke came to my office and had an interview with me about the American Chamber of Commerce. He was very anxious for me to become a member, and wanted me to be elected a Vice-President, so that I could preside at the meetings. I told him I was too busy to give my attention to the business then, and I gave him no answer at that time. Some time after he visited me again, and explained the details of his Chamber of Commerce, when I consented to join and to allow him $5, and he then gave me a block to sign, which I did. I think he told me that I was made First Vice-President, but when or in what manner it was done I cannot say. He said that he had paid $5 for me to the Treasurer, and I paid him that amount. The next time I saw him he came to my office and that some of the gentlemen of the Chamber were going to have a dinner at Delmonico's, and he wanted me to join them to talk matters over. I was engaged on the night he named, and he agreed to postpone the dinner to a later date, when I was myself. I did so, and that was the last I heard of the dinner. [Laughter.] About the time when the circulars were printed calling the meeting of Nov. 8, Clarke sent a boy to me with proofs of the printed notices to mail to me to see if I approved them. I had the boy stand and stay at my office, and the boy left the envelope. Two days later the boy came again and I glanced rapidly over the call. I saw nothing wrong in it, and I think I put my name on the paper, which the boy immediately took back with him. Some days later I got a letter asking if the Chamber was to be done. I replied in one or two that it was, and I believed so then. In the meantime I discovered that I could not attend the meeting, and wrote to Mr. Clarke notifying him, if there was a meeting, I should think a prominent editor of this City, that something was wrong, and at once wrote to Clarke, resigning both as a member and an officer. He had both these letters in his pocket on the night of the meeting, but he read only the first, stating that he had another, but it was private. He came to me afterward, urging me to withdraw my resignation, and leaving a list of committees which he asked me to approve. I told him I had done with the whole thing, and did not look at his list of committees. Since that time whenever my name has been used it has been without my authority and against my protest. I sent for my attorney and told him to go for Clarke, and he did go for him, and I don't think my name will be used again."

At the conclusion of Mr. Bates's statement Mr. Bennett again said that he had seen his signature attached to the proof-sheets. "You are mistaken," said Mr. Bates; "I signed but one paper." "I am not mistaken," shouted Bennett, "for I saw them with my own eyes." Mr. Bates sprang to his feet, and, looking steadily at Bennett, said in a firm, strong voice: "I know what I'm doing, Sir, and what I have done. I want you to understand distinctly, Sir, that my name is there because you are not to contradict me." Mr. Bennett protested that he meant no offense, and shortly after put on his coat and hat and left the room. After some further informal discussion of Clarke the meeting adjourned.

UNITED STATES SUPREME BENCH.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—A movement is on foot here to urge the appointment to the Supreme Court of the United States of a man from the United States Circuit comprising Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, which is without a representative on the Supreme Bench. Before the war it was the practice to appoint members of the Supreme Bench as the representatives of districts, and a return to that practice will be urged. The names of John M. Jewett, Judge C. B. Lawrence, and Judge Gresham are mentioned for a Judgeship.

VERMONT LEGISLATURE.

MONTPELIER, Vt., Dec. 16.—Gov. Farnham presented his first veto Message to-day on the bill practically doing away with the Grand Jury and giving the indicting power to the State Attorney. The reason for the veto, as given, is that the bill is unconstitutional, depriving persons of their right to trial according to the law of the land, the Governor construing that the clause in the Constitution, "law of the land," meant the common law in force when the Constitution was adopted, and the common law when Vermont adopted the Constitution secured men the right of indictment by a jury of peers. The Senate committee has reported favorably on the proposal amending the Constitution so that the Legislature shall hold annual sessions.

AN ORPHAN'S COMPLAINT.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 16.—An interesting proceeding in equity was instituted to-day, in the Common Pleas Court, against John E. Faunce, as attorney-at-law, and a Democratic member of the State Legislature. In 1870 Juan Francisco Fortuondo, a citizen of Philadelphia, was seized in Cuba and put to death by the authorities. At that time his son, José Antonio Fortuondo, was a lad of 15 years, and, by order of the Orphans' Court, was placed in the custody of his uncle. In 1873 the uncle sued the Spanish Government before the Commission of Claims at Washington, and in due time was awarded $40,000 damages. The counsel employed in the case were John O'Byrne, now practicing at the New-York bar, J. E. Ochsenhirter, since deceased, and John A. Gowen, Minister. O'Byrne and Gowen each received a fee of $6,000, to which no objection was made, but now the uncle has awarded $19,000 to Mr. Faunce, who went down to Washington on Tuesday and presented the money. At the proceeding young José protested, declaring that his guardian, "under some secret arrangement or understanding in fraud of his rights," made the assignment to the lawyer-legislator. The court to-day issued an injunction which restrains Mr. Faunce from parting with a dime of the amount until the case is heard. The Department of State still holds $20,000 of the award.

WORK OF THE RAILROADS.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO'S TROUBLES—NOTES ON OTHER MATTERS.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Dec. 16.—Counsel for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad made application to Judge McKennan, in the United States Circuit Court at Pittsburg, this morning, for a rule on the officers of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in charge of that portion of the Junction Railroad between the Market-street tunnel and Thirty-fifth-street to show cause why they should not be considered in contempt in reference to the order and decree of the court in October last in the matter of Lathrop and Taylor against the Junction Railroad Company. The order was granted, and the question will be referred to an Examiner. The Baltimore and Ohio officers claim that the Pennsylvania Company blocks the tunnel with freight cars, to the exclusion of the Baltimore and Ohio trains and in defiance of the court's prohibitory order.

The story is denied that the Pennsylvania Railroad has decided to make Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Road, and as to any lease of that road, it is stated on good authority that no such transfer could possibly occur without the charter of the company being first amended by the Legislatures of both Maryland and Delaware. It is understood that the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Road renewed to-day the offer made to the Baltimore and Ohio about 10 days ago to have its freight, as a whole, transported between New-York and Baltimore on pool rates and divisions if so desired.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Dec. 16.—Judge McKennan, of the United States Circuit Court, granted an injunction some time ago against the Pennsylvania Railroad, restricting it from interfering with the Philadelphia and Reading and Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Companies in their use of the Junction Road, extending from the Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore Road to the Pennsylvania Depot in West Philadelphia. When the war between the Baltimore and Ohio and Pennsylvania Companies began it was alleged that the latter company retarded the business of the Baltimore and Ohio and Reading Roads by obstructing the tracks with slowly moving freight trains. This was denied, but to-day, on application of A. Dickson, of Philadelphia, Judge McKennan granted a rule against the Pennsylvania Road and the Junction Road to show cause why a writ of sequestration should not issue against the latter and attachments against the officers of the latter company for alleged attempts in violation of the injunction which had been issued. The rule was made returnable Jan. 17 in Philadelphia.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Dec. 16.—The long-contested suit of Westinghouse against Eames, for alleged infringements of air-brake patents, involving the Eames Vacuum Brake Company, of this city, has been abandoned, Westinghouse withdrawing the action and paying the costs. This suit has been one in which the railway companies were greatly interested, and it means an end of a great air-brake monopoly.

HOUSTON, Texas, Dec. 16.—A dispatch from Fort Worth says: "A. A. Talmage, Manager of the Missouri Pacific Railway, telegraphs to-day that Fort Worth will be the head-quarters of the International Improvement Company for building a division of the Mexican extension of the Missouri Pacific Road. J. M. Eddy, General Superintendent, and Gen. G. M. Dodge, Chief Engineer, both arrived to-day."

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 16.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad was held here to-day. The earnings of the road for the past fiscal year, as shown by the report of Vice-President Williams C. Wickham, were $2,614,345; operating expenses, $1,945,018; earnings over operating expenses, $669,327, being an increase of $189,018 over the net earnings of 1879. Gen. Wickham refers to the steady improvement in the business of the road, and feels justified in looking forward to a larger increase of business during the next season than ever had before. The following Directors were elected: C. P. Huntington, A. A. Low, A. S. Hatch, Elias Higgins, John Castven, Jesse Lloyd, Wm. Orr, Kerr Wheeler, and D. Tonnier, of New-York, and W. C. Wickham and John Echols, of Virginia.

OTTAWA, Dec. 16.—A Parliamentary opposition caucus was held to-day. It is said a manifesto to the people of Canada, in connection with the Canada Pacific Railway, was under consideration. It is expected to appear in the press throughout the country to-morrow. A large quantity of copies will be printed and mailed at once to every accessible elector in the Dominion. The document, it is said, will explain the nature of the proposition which the Government have brought down, describe the manner in which the Government refuse the information necessary to an intelligent discussion of the contract, and strongly condemn the extravagant price to be paid under it, and demand the immediate withdrawal. The manifesto will be signed by every member of the opposition.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16.—The receipts of the Grand Trunk Railway for the week ending Dec. 11 were $204,307, an increase of $15,098 over the corresponding week of last year.

CHICAGO'S NEW LOAN TAKEN.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—The remainder of the new city 4 per cents. was taken to-day, making an aggregate of $600,000 in three days. Much dissatisfaction is expressed at the fact that this loan has been taken by large capitalists instead of by the public at large. One man, H. H. Nash, secured $100,000 of the bonds. Bankers state that had the loan been put on the market for competition the bonds would have brought a premium of 2 per cent., and the city is considered so much the loser.

APPROVING A NICARAGUAN CANAL.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 16.—The Committee of the Board of Trade to consider interoceanic canal affairs has telegraphed congratulations to Admiral Ammen on the favorable outlook for a Nicaraguan canal, also to Senator Booth asking him and the California delegation to assist in furtherance of the project.

IRISH SYMPATHIZERS IN MONTREAL.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16.—A mass-meeting of sympathizers with the agitation in Ireland was held here to-night, under the auspices of the local branch of the Land League. The attendance was small and no leading Irishmen were present. The speeches were moderate and well received by the audience.

LADIES' LAND LEAGUE IN BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 16.—The Buffalo branch of the Ladies' Land League was fully organized to-night, under the rules of the parent body in New-York City. The meeting was large and enthusiastic, and entrance fees to a large amount were paid.

NOMINATED FOR CONGRESS.

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., Dec. 16.—The Democratic Convention of the Third Congressional District, at West Lebanon, N. H., to-day nominated Col. J. B. Rosier, of West Lebanon, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Congressman-elect Pearsons.

GENEROUS GIFT TO A UNIVERSITY.

ELKTON, Ky., Dec. 16.—The will of Mrs. Maggie Rudey, which was admitted to probate yesterday, gives $200,000 in Louisville and Nashville Railroad stock to the Vanderbilt University, at Nashville.

NATIONAL CAPITAL TOPICS

DECLINE OF AMERICAN SHIPPING.

ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF LEGISLATION BEFORE THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The resolutions adopted by the shipping convention held at Boston in October last were presented to the House Committee on Commerce to-day by a delegation representing the National Board of Trade. The delegation was composed of Messrs. Webb and Snow, of New-York; Windsor, of Philadelphia; Adams, of Buffalo; Parsons, of Detroit, and Newall, of Bath, Me. The resolutions, which were published at the time of their adoption, were read and supported by Mr. Windsor in a brief speech, in which he urged the importance of immediate attention on the part of Congress to the wants of our languishing commerce. He was followed by Mr. Ambrose Snow, who urged that the interests of those engaged in commerce by sailing ships should not be overlooked in the great desire to promote our commerce; that by subsidizing lines of steamers without making suitable provision for our merchant sailing vessels, one industry would be stimulated while the other might be destroyed. He was satisfied that the merchants, ship-owners, and ship-builders would never agree upon any bill or form of legislation which would accomplish the general results so much desired by the vessel owners, deriving their coloring from the particular branch of the shipping industry in which their money is invested. He hoped Congress would hear all the interests, and then formulate some general legislation bearing upon the subject. None of the speakers undertook to explain the direct causes of the decline of American shipping, or to offer any specific remedies. Mr. Webb alluded to the fact that in 1879 the English and American tonnage in China waters aggregated about 3,000,000 tons each, while in 1880 the English tonnage aggregates 6,400,000 tons and the American has fallen to 500,000 tons. At this rate our merchant marine (except those vessels engaged in coastwise and trade upon the lakes) would be swept from the ocean.

Mr. Parsons, the last speaker, addressed himself mainly to that portion of the resolutions bearing upon our consular system. He attributed the supremacy of the English in many of the markets of the world to the superiority of their consular system, and the hearty and effective work done by their Consuls in extending English trade and opening to English manufactures the ports of every country where the English Government has any diplomatic or consular representatives. On the other hand, as the result of a careful study of the subject during a residence of several years abroad, he was satisfied that the majority of our Consuls were not only men wholly unacquainted with their duties, but were paid such insufficient salaries that they were unable, even with the utmost economy, to acquire any degree of influence as compared with the representatives of other nations.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC TRADE.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF STATISTICS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The annual report of Joseph Nimmo, Jr., Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, on the foreign commerce of the United States was completed to-day. In regard to our export trade, Mr. Nimmo says: "The five leading articles of export during the year ended June 30 1880, were as follows: Bread and breadstuffs, $256,056,885; cotton, unmanufactured, $211,555,905; provisions, $197,042,943; mineral oils, $26,218,625; tobacco and manufactures of, $18,442,376." The United States, he says, already surpasses every other country in the magnitude of its exports both of breadstuffs and provisions, and it is maintained that the market for American breadstuffs and provisions in Europe can be still further extended. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland stands first among importing countries with respect to the value of imports, both of breadstuffs and provisions. Tables are presented showing that of the following commodities imported into the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the percentage imported from the United States was as follows: Wheat, 68 per cent.; Indian Corn, 90 per cent.; live animals, 44 per cent.; beef, salted, 99 per cent.; beef, fresh or slightly salted, 98 per cent.; pork, salted, 99 per cent.; bacon, 94 per cent.; hams, 95 per cent.; lard, 96 per cent.; meat preserved otherwise than salted, 79 per cent., and pork, salted, 97 per cent. The report says: "During the last 10 years the competition of American breadstuffs and provisions in British markets has greatly reduced the price of those commodities, and consequently the profits of producing them in the United Kingdom. Apprehensions have been awakened as to the ultimate effect of this competence upon the agricultural interests of the latter country. The question is, in a conditions-economic sense, a very large one, since it embraces not only the interests of British farmers, but also the rates of wages paid to farm laborers, the value of lands devoted to agricultural purposes, and the revenue derived therefrom by British land-owners." * * * The growth of the exportations of breadstuffs from the United States has also led to serious apprehensions in competing grain-producing countries, in which inferior methods of agriculture prevail, and where the facilities for handling and transporting the products of the soil to market by commerce are less advanced than in this country."

Regarding the maritime interests of the United States, Mr. Nimmo says: "The decadence of that branch of the American merchant marine which is employed in the foreign commerce of the country continues to engage the public attention. This decadence is indicated by the following facts: The building of ships and barks employed in our foreign commerce fell from an annual average of 223 during the 10 years from 1861 to 1869 to an annual average of 74 during the 10 years from 1871 to 1880. There were only 28 ships and barks built during the year ended June 30, 1880. The iron steam-ship is now the controlling vehicle of commerce on the ocean. The tonnage of iron vessels built in this country during the year ended June 30, 1880, was 101,882 tons, almost entirely for our coastwise or home trade, in which no foreign competition is allowed under the provisions of our navigation laws, whereas the iron ship-building of Great Britain for the last five years reported amounted to 1,800,108

MINES, DOGS, AND EXPERTS

LIFE IN A MINING CAMP IN SOUTHERN UTAH.

HOW GENTILES AND MORMONS DEPEND ON ONE ANOTHER—PAYING SILVER MINES AND GOOD PROSPECTS—PECULIARITIES OF THE MORMON DOG—THE MINING EXPERT AND WHAT IS THOUGHT OF HIM.

SILVER REEF, Southern Utah, Dec. 5.—They say silence is golden, and I have not written lately because I have been trying to see how rich a man could get by emulating the oyster and keeping his mouth shut, but the results have not verified the proverb. Silver Reef is a mining camp where the less a man has to say the less likely he is to find some gentleman ready to disagree with him, and there is wisdom in following the example of the bivalve. It is a good plan to mind your own business in almost any country. There are many people, however, that have so little of their own that they conceive it necessary to interest themselves in that of other people. It is likely to lead to trouble, but still it seems popular. The people who come nearest to giving their attention to their own affairs are the Mormons of this country, and they don't allow outsiders to know much about theirs. We live here in their midst, but it is seldom that a Gentile gains access to their domestic hearth. However ample the bosom of a Mormon family, the chances are against your getting into it. It may be a laudable curiosity, but it is attended with unpleasant results. Sometimes objections are offered in such an unmistakable manner that the seeker for information puts his friends to the expense of an advertisement for a "man missing." It is a good country to live in if a man is not prone to meddle with other people's affairs. He gets a wrinkle if he does that serves him for many days. While Brigham was alive he was bitterly opposed to the development of Utah mines; perhaps he is yet, but his views are not now regarded, especially since the Mormons have found that the more mines the more business for them. We are dependent upon them for supplies, could not well get along without them, and they could not get along without us as they now are able to get sight of a few dollars in cash, which before the Gentiles came was something they seldom saw. It is a miserable country for agricultural pursuits, as there is little soil to be found that can be cultivated, for want of water for irrigation. Wherever it can be found there is a Mormon settlement, and by hard labor and perseverance little patches of grain are raised. Fruit, however, seems to be easily raised. Grapes, apples, peaches, and pears are abundant, and the thrifty Mormon loads up his wagon with the same and carries a few cords of wood for the nearest mining camp. There are several pleasant little Mormon towns near from which we derive our supplies, and manage to live on such fat as the land affords. Although Gentile and Mormon do not fraternize socially, we find them trustworthy and ready to do a great deal of hard work for a very small amount of money compared with the prices our own people demand.

The ores of this camp are exclusively silver bearing, and a soft sandstone that is easily mined and worked. The silver is a chloride; the veins or bodies are found in large ledges and often very rich, running up into the hundreds, but the average may be set down at about $35 per ton, which, by reason of its being so easily worked, affords a fair profit. The principal mines of the camp are the Stormont-Christy and Barbee and Walker. The first named have several claims which are being worked with vigor and are producing largely. This company have a water-power mill of 10 stamps and crush 75 tons daily. The mill is on Virgin River, distant about five miles from their claims, the ores of which are hauled to the mill, under contract, with Mormon teams at a very reasonable price per ton. The company are prosperous, as their bullion shipments to your City testify. The Christy is also a fine property, embracing 14 or 15 claims, four or five of which are being worked, and produce daily about 45 tons of good grade ore. This company has a five-stamp mill, eight pans, and six settlers. The product is highly satisfactory to the owners. The ores are hauled about a mile to the mill, which is situated in the town. The bullion is shipped to San Francisco.

The Barbee and Walker is just on the margin of the camp, with a new five-stamp mill, which, being placed at the mouth of the mine, has the advantage of receiving its ores direct from the hoisting works. They are landed directly in front of the battery, saving the expense of hauling. This property is owned by a New-York company, and its bullion is shipped to your City. Since its acquirement by the present company, about six months ago, it has paid dividends monthly to the amount of $60,000, or $10,000 per month, equal to 24 per cent per annum, on the market value of the stock. The company is about adding two more pans and one settler to the capacity of its mill, which will increase its output of bullion considerably, as it will then be capable of working from 45 to 50 tons of ore daily. Its present capacity is 35 tons. This mine is well open, and easily supplies the amount of ore necessary to keep the mill actively running. A body of very fine ore has been recently opened up in both the north and south drifts, giving promise of a most satisfactory product. In addition to the property of the companies mentioned, there are hundreds of claims undeveloped, showing large bodies of low grade ores near the surface, but few of them having been worked sufficiently to determine their positive value. They present a fair field for enterprise and capital, the latter essential being too scarce in the camp to admit of the necessary work that might develop future bonanzas. These claims can be had cheap or worked on such terms and conditions as to justify the expense of prospecting. The monthly output of bullion has averaged about $100,000, and is increasing.

The next important product of the camp is dogs, mostly of a species unequaled for worthlessness. The advent of a strange cur under a Mormon wagon brings them out in full force. From every saloon they rush forth on the unsuspecting stranger until the street is one mass of dogs, tail, and hair, all yelping, howling, and snapping. The Mormon dog is a peculiar institution—a sneaking, low-bred cur, bereft of tail, and for general worthlessness cannot be squaled, even in Constantinople. By what process or freak of nature he came to be curtailed of that usual appendage is one of the conundrums. My first idea was that it had been amputated or driven up, but such is not the case. Like Topsey, they were born so. The objection of the Dutchman to selling his dog because he would miss the wag of his tail when he came home at night cannot be urged in the present instance, for this animal has none to wag. He cannot give expression to his views either by vibrating it or curling it under him when he feels like sneaking. This absence of tail in the Mormon dog offers a wide field for reflection to the scientist. You can't estimate his value by the distance you could sling him by the tail, inasmuch as there is not enough to get hold of. Whatever the views of the dog may be, he cannot express them by the usual manner of a well-regulated canine. If you approach a house you cannot determine how you will be received by the animal, as the indicator is missing. He may be favorably disposed, but you must guess at it, and often your great mistake is discovered too late to save your trousers. He has a most peculiar bark also, different from the average dog. If I had one of these animals I should name him Parvian, on account of his bark, which would be perfectly proper, as he belongs to the quinine species. While the Mormon dog is a funny-looking fellow, he certainly can never be a great wag, even though brevity may be the soul of wit.

It is getting winterish. We can discover that fact from two circumstances—from the tenderness of the chickens to stand on one foot and curl the other up in their feathers for warmth, and the paucity of mining experts. We have not had one here for a month. In pleasant weather they swarm over the hills, dressed in the usual manner of experts—trousers tucked in the tops of their boots, a soft hat, a wise expression, and the inevitable prospecting steel hammer. The average mining expert is the recipient of expressions of great contempt from the honest miner, who considers him a humbug. Here nearly everych such judgment may be I am unable to say, but the gentleman of the pick and red shirt is always ready to hazard coin on it, and he sometimes proves his assertions by the little games he plays upon the unsuspecting Freyburger. A witness on a trial at Salt Lake, not long ago, promulgated a theory in regard to mining experts which has been very generally accepted, whether correct or not. On being asked if he knew what a mining expert was, he said he thought he did, and, being told to give his views, said he was a chap that parted his hair in the middle, wore spectacles, murdered the King's English, and was a —— fool generally.

"Who's that lot dead?" The gentleman so expressing his views probably had been the victim of some quack expert, and, consequently, felt sore. Of course, we who know who's who can laugh at the "fling" at the fraternity without necessarily being inoculated with the virus as generally applicable. It is only the quacks that are sensitive. We have our little fun with doctors and lawyers, and why not with the mining experts. The digestion is all the better for it.

"A little humor now and then," &c.

The world at large is full enough of sorrow, wretchedness, and misery, but there is no sense in shutting out the fact that there's a good deal of fun in it too, if you only know how to get it. Not one in a hundred does know. It is as good as a fortune when you do; but the appreciation, and the fortune, too, just makes it "too lovely for anything."

IMMIGRANT RAILROAD TICKETS.

THE BOARD REFUSE TO FAVOR THE NEW-YORK STATE ROADS.

The general passenger agents of the New-York Central and New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Companies held a conference on Wednesday with the Commissioners of Emigration, on the subject of the payment of commissions on immigrant railroad tickets and the sale of orders by the steam-ship companies, and yesterday they united in a formal letter to the board, which was considered at a special meeting of the Castle Garden Committee during the afternoon. In the letter the general passenger agents say, among other things:

"Referring to the resolution passed by your honorable board on Dec. 13 accepting the offer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company of a reduction of 20 per cent, and to the protracted interview with the Commissioners on the 15th, we now beg to confirm the facts then presented by the New-York State roads. We believe the action of the Commissioners to have been based on erroneous information. It was proved to you that neither the Pennsylvania Railroad nor any of the New-York State roads is or has been selling tickets to immigrants outside of Castle Garden at a reduction of 20 per cent from tariff prices, and that, on the contrary, the three roads were practically adhering to the same tariff rates outside as inside Castle Garden. It has also been explained to you that notwithstanding the opposition of the Pennsylvania Railroad to the payment of commissions to steam-ship companies and others, the payment of such commissions by the New-York State roads is a commercial necessity to place the interests centering in this port upon the same footing as competing routes outside, and, while the Pennsylvania road is thus opposing the sale of tickets or orders from abroad through New-York State roads, it is also selling from its American and Red Star Lines sailing, through passenger orders between Europe and the West, via Philadelphia, and accepting lower rates through Philadelphia than they charge from New-York to the West, and paying liberal commissions for the purpose of securing business for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Philadelphia. If the New-York State roads, under such circumstances, should be compelled to pay the same tariff rates outside as inside Castle Garden, it has also been explained to you that notwithstanding the opposition of the Pennsylvania Railroad to the payment of commissions to steam-ship companies and others, the payment of such commissions by the New-York State roads is a commercial necessity to place the interests centering in this port upon the same footing as competing routes outside, and, while the Pennsylvania road is thus opposing the sale of tickets or orders from abroad through New-York State roads, it is also selling from its American and Red Star Lines sailing, through passenger orders between Europe and the West, via Philadelphia, and accepting lower rates through Philadelphia than they charge from New-York to the West, and paying liberal commissions for the purpose of securing business for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Philadelphia. If the New-York State roads, under such circumstances, should be compelled to pay the same tariff rates outside as inside Castle Garden. We believe the action of the Commissioners to have been based on erroneous information. It was proved to you that neither the Pennsylvania Railroad nor any of the New-York State roads is or has been selling tickets to immigrants outside of Castle Garden at a reduction of 20 per cent from tariff prices, and that, on the contrary, the three roads were practically adhering to the same tariff rates outside as inside Castle Garden. It has also been explained to you that notwithstanding the opposition of the Pennsylvania Railroad to the payment of commissions to steam-ship companies and others, the payment of such commissions by the New-York State roads is a commercial necessity to place the interests centering in this port upon the same footing as competing routes outside, and, while the Pennsylvania road is thus opposing the sale of tickets or orders from abroad through New-York State roads, it is also selling from its American and Red Star Lines sailing, through passenger orders between Europe and the West, via Philadelphia, and accepting lower rates through Philadelphia than they charge from New-York to the West, and paying liberal commissions for the purpose of securing business for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Philadelphia. If the New-York State roads, under such circumstances, should be compelled to pay the same tariff rates outside as inside Castle Garden. If these rates were to be imposed by your board, as New-York, the legitimate operators of the New-York State roads would be obstructed, and the Pennsylvania road would still be free to conduct its business through Philadelphia, untrammeled. Under such circumstances the New-York State roads protest against the adoption of your committee, and we ask that the resolution of Dec. 13 be rescinded on the assurance that the rates inside of Castle Garden shall be as low as those outside."

Commissioner Ulrich offered a resolution "that the communication from the general passenger agents representing the New-York Central and Erie Railroads contains no facts which will justify this commission in rescinding its resolution of Dec. 13." This was unanimously adopted. The Commissioners subsequently explained that what they seek is the entire abolition of the practice of paying commissions on immigrant tickets, and that the letter of the railroad agents "wholly ignores this point entirely." They further stated that they were not so much after the interests of any railroads, but of the immigrants. They believed that the reduction would benefit the latter, and no argument had yet been advanced by the railroads to convince them that any benefit would accrue to immigrants by continuing the course complained of. As to the business passing through Philadelphia half of the Philadelphia steamers spoken of now stop at New-York, and the Commissioners have been given to understand that the passenger business here is so much more advantageous that it is intended to run here exclusively.

NEW HOSPITAL FOR CHILDREN.

DEDICATION OF ST. MARY'S IN THIRTY-FOURTH-STREET NEXT WEEK.

The new St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children, in Thirty-fourth-street near Ninth-avenue, the interior of which is nearly finished, will be dedicated at 2 P. M. next Thursday by Bishop Potter. It has been erected on a plot of ground formerly occupied by a smaller institution of the same character, in charge of the Protestant Episcopal Sisters of St. Mary. The new hospital has a frontage of 50 feet, and is 65 feet deep, exclusive of a rear extension measuring 40 feet. It is four and a half stories in height, and built of pressed brick and trimmings of light brown stone. A broad, arched entrance, handsomely embellished with carved stone-work and massive doors ornamented with stained glass, leads to a wide vestibule, in the centre of which is the main staircase approaching the various apartments in the upper portions of the building. In the basement, which has a separate entrance from the street, are a reception ward for patients, a drug room, kitchen, laundry, and numerous closets, all of which are fitted up in the most approved manner. The first floor is divided into a reception room for visitors, a dining room, an office, and one ward. On the second floor are two wards, occupying each side of the building, and on the third floor are rooms for the Sisters, a linen room, and a chapel. The fourth floor is divided into a play-room for the children, the walls of which look into Thirty-fourth-street; an operating apartment, an isolation ward, and sleeping rooms for servants. In the rear extension are cozy ward dining-rooms, fitted up with numerous closets, several bath-rooms, and other compartments.

The entire interior is finished in polished ash, the flooring being of hard pine. Particular attention has been given to the plumbing arrangements throughout the building. The pipes leading to and from the closets, basins, and sinks have been left entirely exposed, so that when a leakage occurs, or anything in connection with the plumbing system gets out of order, the defect can be readily detected and remedied. Every floor is heated by steam. An elevator, inclosed in brick walls, runs from the basement to the attic. The hospital, which is exclusively intended for the care of sick children between the ages of 2 and 12 years, is now open for the reception of patients. It has no permanent endowment fund, which to derive an income, relying for support on the contributions of persons interested in the care of sick children whose parents or friends cannot give them proper attention. The Sisters of St. Mary, who have charge of the institution, are under the immediate supervision of Bishop Potter.

HOW HE OBTAINED MONEY.

Charles W. Davis, alias "Tuttle Duane," the gambler, who was arrested by Detectives O'Connor and Field for having obtained money by false pretenses, was arraigned before Recorder Smyth in General Sessions yesterday. There were four indictments against Davis, to all of which he pleaded not guilty, and on motion of Assistant District Attorney Lyon he was committed to the Tombs. It is claimed that Davis has every Fall during the past five years reaped a rich harvest by representing himself as an officer of a Republican club, and, by means of a forged commission obtaining subscriptions from wealthy Republicans to the campaign fund. To Mr. Woodbury G. Langdon, of No. 719 Fifth-avenue, he represented himself as the Secretary of the Twentieth Assembly District Republican Association, and for four years in succession obtained that gentleman's check for $100 in aid of the campaign fund of the district. It is also alleged that he obtained considerable sums of money from other prominent Republicans by using the names of Judge Fullerton, Solon B. Smith, and others prominent in politics. These amounts, of course, never found their way into the hands for which they were intended, but were appropriated by Davis to his own use. Mr. Lyon says that he expects, within a week, to be able to produce half a dozen gentlemen who have been swindled by Davis, alias "Tuttle Duane."

OPENING OF A CHURCH BAZAAR.

The ladies of the Social Union of the Seventeenth-Street Methodist-Episcopal Church opened last evening in the church an attractive Christmas bazaar. Preceding the opening the large company which had gathered in the church listened to a pleasing musical entertainment given by the church choir—Messrs. Chapman, Noakes, and Swan, Miss Sharp and Mrs. Boston. The Rev. A. S. Sanford, Pastor, introduced the Rev. W. T. Hill, Presiding Elder, and the Rev. Lindsay Parker, of the Sixty-first-Street Church, each of whom made brief addresses upon the desirability of social church gatherings as aids to religious life and work. The visitors then descended to the Sunday-school-room, where useful and fancy articles, suitable for Christmas gifts, were offered for sale by the ladies, and where an excellent supper was served to all the hungry persons in the throng. The bazaar will be continued this evening, when an address will be delivered by the Rev. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr.

THE BOARD OF APPORTIONMENT.

Robert H. Shannon and Jefferson Levy, two tax-payers from the annexed district, appeared before the Board of Estimate and Apportionment yesterday and urged that no reduction be made in the proposed appropriation of $30,000 for the maintenance of roads in their district. They said the roads were in a very bad condition, and that too large a proportion of the public money was used for salaries. Commissioner Morris said he had been appealed to by President Roome, of the Manhattan Gas Company, to ask for a larger appropriation for furnishing gas and lighting public lamps, as the gas companies could not do the work next year for the sum paid this year. It was decided to give representatives of the various companies an opportunity to state their views to the board to-morrow.

JERSEY CITY'S TAX RATE

WHY CITIZENS OF HUDSON COUNTY ARE HEAVILY TAXED.

THE CITY IN DEBT WHILE RAILROAD CORPORATIONS HOLD THIRTY MILLION DOLLARS WORTH OF PROPERTY EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

The people of Jersey City are paying a tax of 3 per cent. on the assessed value of their property, or to be accurate, the tax rate is $32 50 on $1,000. When it is considered that much of this property is assessed at its full value, it will be seen how oppressively this burden of taxation weighs upon the city. But this is not all. Few improvements are being made, although important public works, which stand unfinished, should be completed, and the comfort and credit of the city demand that others should be begun at once. But the municipality is too poor. Every year $300,000 or $900,000 is needed to meet the interest on the city debt, and the remainder of the amount raised by the heavy tax only suffices to defray current expenses. Of course, this is one more instance of reckless borrowing, but the people of Jersey City will have little time to wail over the past, if they address themselves, as they should, to meet the questions which obtrude themselves upon the notice of every property-holder. Some relief must be obtained—a relief more substantial, too, than that derived from cutting down the salaries of school teachers and other pleasure economies. Many reform measures are discussed, but upon one point there is substantial agreement among all who have given serious attention to city affairs. There is a universal demand for some radical change in the system of taxation which exempts corporate property from assessment for local and municipal taxes.

This evil is great and it is growing. The Erie and New-Jersey Central Roads pay a local tax of 1 per cent. on a portion of their property under the act of 1873. But the Pennsylvania Road has an irrepealable contract under which it pays a certain sum to the State, in consideration of which it is exempted from local tax. The amount paid to the State is one-half of 1 per cent. on a portion of its property, and it takes the place of the old transit dues, or the "head and tonnage tax," originally levied upon every passenger and ton of freight which crossed the State. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Road and the Morris Canal Company enjoy exemptions on similar terms. Just how much real estate escapes assessment under this policy it is difficult to determine. The reports of these corporations do not furnish adequate data for an estimate, and there is no reason why the local assessors should value property which pays no tax. The corporations have seized miles after miles and spread over block after block, until their possessions the most valuable part of the City and almost its entire water-front. The property of the Pennsylvania Railroad is estimated all the way from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000. The Erie from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. The Central from $8,000,000 to $9,000,000. In the financial statement rendered by Mayor Hopper to the Controller of the State in 1879 he says: "In addition to the taxable property there are over $30,000,000 of property belonging to railroad corporations situated in the city, which is exempt from taxation under State laws." The effect of this enormous exemption upon the tax rate can be understood, when it is considered that the entire value of the taxable property in the city amounts to $58,411,958, the amount exempted being more than half as much as the amount assessed. It is estimated by a competent authority that in the whole County of Hudson, including the cities of Hoboken, Bayonne, and the towns, the value of exempted property will reach $50,000,000, while the value of property assessed is but little more than $90,000,000. From this it appears that $3 worth of property pays the tax which should be raised upon $4 and some cents.

And the evil is increasing. Property is being condemned constantly for railroad use. A few years ago the Pennsylvania Road took possession of a block all the way through from the Hill to Senator McPherson's slaughter-house on the river. This strip of property was not only taken from the taxable real estate of the city, but the value of adjacent lots and houses was reduced so as to make the burden on the remainder of the city still more depressing. Still further, it is known that against some of the properties obtained by the Pennsylvania Road the city had claims for arrears of taxes, and yet the corporation did not insist on clearing the title, knowing that it could defy the efforts of the city to collect its own. During the past year alone $1,800,000 has been taken out of the tax levy. It is plain that unless the increase in the city tax rate will soon be fully twice as heavy as it would be if all property in the city were equally taxed.

Now, it will be no child's play to carry out a practical remedy for this ruinous state of things. The people of Hudson County have a case against the State as well as against the corporations. The State exempts this property from taxation in consideration for benefits received. The gross sum paid by the railroads is considerable in itself, although altogether less than the corporations should pay. But the State receives it all. Hudson County, which is crushed under the burden, should receive a percentage of the sum paid to the State. But even this would afford no adequate relief. If these contracts are irrepealable the roads should be forced to surrender them. Able lawyers hold that they are not binding, and that the contrary view is in the courts. They are almost omnipotent in politics. They elect Governors who appoint Judges, and Senators and Assemblymen who make laws. But in former days the people have aroused themselves against corporations and assumed their power. When the old New-Jersey Road was struggling to make its charter perpetual, A. O. Zabriskie, afterward Chancellor of the State, threatened to raise a "pickaxe brigade" to tear up the tracks, and the Legislature was compelled by public sentiment to limit the charter. The State could have the option to take possession of the property. Still later the people won a signal victory when the free Railroad law was passed. In many respects the roads are growing weaker. The stock of the Camden and Amboy has been bought up, and the old New-Jersey families who held it. Prominent New-Jersey lawyers who acted as leading counsel are gradually being replaced, and the business taken to Philadelphia. Jerseymen in prominent positions are being removed and relatively inferior substituted. The sympathies of the best part of New-Jersey society are no longer with the Pennsylvania Road. It is a foreign corporation, and it rules by the force of money only. Money is powerful, but it can be beaten by people whose rights of property are invaded, and the people have the power to force these corporations to terms.

The city is at the expense of furnishing protection for these corporations, which help to bear some of the burdens. If a riot should occur in the city, the loss of cars burned and track destroyed would fall upon the city, and yet the roads pay not one cent to support a Police Department. This surely is a monstrous wrong, and an act is contemplated relieving municipalities from obligations for damages under this head, the corporations upon which pay no tax. If the State persists in taking all the tax paid by the roads, and is satisfied with the amount received, it would certainly be equitable for the State to assume all responsibilities of this nature, and it would be righteous legislation to make damages for destruction by riot recoverable from the State instead of from the city.

Of course, the railroads have rights and privileges which should be respected and preserved. All that is asked by the people of Jersey City is justice. They cannot remain passive until they are made bankrupt by the encroachments and exactions of corporate power. The State has the right to take possession of these roads in a few years, and this right should be exercised at the time extended until some satisfactory adjustment and equalization of the burdens is effected. This is the coming question in New-Jersey, and there is a growing determination among the solid men of both parties to unite for self-protection.

A BOY'S LETTER TO GEN. GARFIELD.

From the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat.

Some of the youthful city readers of the Democrat are acquainted with Gerard Effinger, a lad whose parents reside in Bloomington, Ill., but has made young friends in Davenport through visits to an aunt who lives here. Gerard is only about 8 years old. Gerard writes his aunt that he has received a cabinet photograph of Gen. Garfield, with the autograph of the President-elect upon it, as an acknowledgment of the following letter he took it into his head to write early last month:

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Nov. 4.

DEAR GEN. GARFIELD: I have been wanting you to be elected for some time, and now I would like to write you a letter, if you will accept it. We had so many large torch-light processions. Some of them were four miles long. You ought to have been here last Wednesday evening. The streets were crowded with women and children, and all around the square they had tar-barrels, and they set them on fire, and they kept putting boxes and barrels on. But all the time while this was going on the people had horns and all the boys were drumming on tin pans, because they were so glad you got elected; and in their joy they were firing balls, and it would have almost made one deaf that had not heard the cannon and the fire-works. All my schoolmates take great interest in the Republican Party. I am 8 years old; is good-bye. Write soon. Yours truly, GERARD EFFINGER.

Gerard wrote all the letter himself, and his parents did not know of it until after it was mailed.

AN ABSENT-MINDED MAN'S ACT.

A Hartford paper says that a curious demonstration of absent-mindedness occurred at the New-York and New-England Railroad hearing in that city on Wednesday. The original dispatch of instruction to Conductor Aldrich, in violating which he met his death, was put into evidence and was passed about the room. One gentleman, with whom it lodged, held it a while and then began carelessly twisting it up as one does a bit of waste paper. The hearing went on, and by and by some one asked for the dispatch. It could not be found. One person thought he saw it being twisted by the gentleman alluded to, but the latter did not remember having had it. An adjournment to hunt for it failed to reveal it. Finally, when the hearing was over it was found on the floor twisted into a little bunch, where it had been dropped by the absent-minded gentleman, who had forgotten he ever had it.

CATAMOUNT CHARLEY.

HOW THE HUNTER OF PIKE'S PEAK WAGGED AND BROUGHT IN HIS GAME.

From the Colorado Springs Gazette, Dec. 11.

Yesterday the well-known hunter of Pike's Peak, Catamount Charley, appeared in town riding his piebald mustang, Captain Kid. The personal appearance of this famous hunter and trapper is familiar to every resident of Colorado Springs. His tall, loosely-knit figure, his long legs, his dark face, black eyes, and flowing black beard, which sweeps in a sable cataract over his bosom, are all well known to our citizens. Catamount Charley was dressed in his Sunday clothes, which consisted of a yellow buckskin shirt and buckskin trousers, both trimmed with a fringe of buckskin cut into strips, a cartridge belt filled with the loaded shells of a heavy revolving rifle, which he carried in his hand, a wide white sombrero on his head and moccasins on his feet. Catamount Charley dismounted in front of Aiken & Hunt's museum, and leaving his mustang unhitched, removed a heavy bale of skins from the cruppe of the saddle, and walked into the store. Mr. Hunt was the only one in the store at the time.

"I say, boss," remarked Charley, "I've got some skins yere I'd like to sell yer." "Certainly," said Mr. Hunt, with his usual politeness. "I shall be glad to look at them." "Yere," said Charley, "is a mountain bison's hide, yere is a mountain lion's hide, and yere are two more lions' hides. That fust lion's skin is the biggest I ever saw. It's 8 feet from tip to tip; the critter must have weighed 500 pounds. You see it was this way. I was looking round for game back of the Peak, when all at once I heard a growlin' and a howlin', which reminded me that the mountain lions was not all dead yet. So I crawled around a p'int of rock and I'm blamed if I didn't see three mountain lions havin' a fight with a mountains bison. I tell you, it was a big fight. The lions would make a leap, and the bison would back up against a roof and take them on his horns. I don't know how the fight would have come out, but it was just too good a picnic for me to let it pass, so I drawed a bead on the fust lion as comes in range and pulled my old rifle off. The surprisin' part of the affair was that just as I pulled one of the lions jumped in between me and the one I shot at and caught the ball just back of his ribs. It passed clean through him, and knocked a little from its course, it cut the throat of the second lion, and broke the neck of the bison. They all dropped in a heap, and I was so tickled that I incautiously jumped out from behind the rock, when the third lion saw me."

"Indeed," said Mr. Hunt. "Yes," said Charley, "the third lion he saw me, and made a jump in my direction. As I saw him comin' I didn't have time to take aim, but I brought my repeatin' rifle up under my arm and took a fly shot at him. Lucky for me, I took him in the breast, and he tumbled over dead." "Indeed," said Mr. Hunt. "Yes," said Charley, "he tumbled over dead; and now what will you give me for the four skins, three mountain lions and one bison?" We left Mr. Hunt engaged in a mercantile combat with Charley over the price of those skins.

USURIOUS INTEREST.

AN INTERESTING CASE IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT IN NEBRASKA.

Correspondence of the Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 8.—One of the most important suits before the United States Circuit Court in this district for years was tried last week before Judge Dundy (United States District Judge holding Circuit Court sessions) and a jury. It is not only important in itself but it opened the way for future litigation and judgments against almost every banking institution in the State. The title of the case was "John I. Redick against the First National Bank of Omaha." Messrs. Redick & Redick and Albert Swartslander appearing for the plaintiff, and Messrs. J. M. Woolworth, J. N. Poppleton, and J. C. Cowin for the bank. All these gentlemen are men of acknowledged legal ability.

The plaintiff, Redick, had been for a long time a customer of the bank, and about December, 1879, the bank held Redick's individual paper for about $2,000. Redick applied to the bank for an extension of time on the paper, and an arrangement was made by which Redick took up his own paper and gave in payment thereof four notes of one Sievers, due respectively in one, two, three, and four years, and the bank discounted these notes at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum for the full time they had to run. The plaintiff claimed that the transaction was usurious, and in violation of the laws of Nebraska and the national banking act, and therefore brought suit against the bank to recover twice the amount of all interest so taken. The law of Nebraska does not allow a greater rate than 10 per cent. per annum for a period longer than one year.

The defendant claimed that the notes were not discounted, but bought outright, both the President and Cashier swearing that the notes were bought in the usual manner, and that the transaction was not a loan or forbearance, and further that they purchased paper like that every day. The case was ably argued. The instructions of the court to the jury were able and carefully given. Paragraph IV. of the court's instructions was as follows: "The payment and receipt of an unlawful rate of interest is of itself prima facie evidence of a corrupt agreement; and this being shown, the burden of proof is on the defendant to make it appear that there was no corrupt interest. Although the defendant might not have intended to violate the statute, yet if too much interest was taken upon a mistaken supposition that its mode of calculating discount was lawful, this would not be a mistake of fact which could excuse or relieve the defendant, but it would be a mistake of law for which the defendant would be held responsible; and the agreement would be corrupt in law whatever the actual intention of the defendant may have been as to taking unlawful interest, no mistake of fact such as error being shown." This instrument would seem to apply to any State.

The jury, after being out 28 hours, found that the bank had taken $3,006 68 interest on a usurious transaction, and accordingly brought in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for twice that sum, $6,013 32.

MEANING OF THE NAME BALTIMORE.

A paper entitled "Celtic Baltimore, its Etymology," was read by Gen. Charles E. Phelps at the last meeting of the Maryland Historical Society, in Baltimore. In it Gen. Phelps said: "That this city was named in perpetuation of the memory of the first and greatest Lord Baltimore, who was elevated to what Read has called 'the barren dignity of an Irish peerage,' and that the title was taken from a place in Ireland named Baltimore, constitutes about the sum of all the information that is to be found on the subject. Every accessible source of information that could throw light upon the biography of Calvert has been drained, and the closest scrutiny has been directed to that critical period of his career which marks his conversion. It is upon this point of his life that all the lines of historical criticism and research have converged as to a focus. It is the time of his surrender of his Irish estates and the restitution of those estates. The name of one of these estates was the Manor, or, as it was sometimes called, the town, of Baltimore, in County Longford, and from this Calvert took his title. It is not a little remarkable that during this century no attention should have been given on either side to the Celtic etymology of that name, and the more so as the simple translation of it into the English (God-Place) discloses a name of a significance of which fully accounts for a fact that no attempt has ever been made to account for it before. It also accounts for Calvert's preference for the name. An article that appeared in one of the daily papers gave the origin as from "Bal" meaning "belt," and "More" meaning "Belt" means a strait, and hence Baltimore meant the 'Great Belt,' or 'Great Strait.' The lecturer then went on to show the fallacy of this derivation. The other one, he said, referred to the sanctuary of the Druids, or the worship of Baal, and makes the original of the name of the city the Great Habitation of Bali. Gen. Phelps said "Bal" was Celtic for "place." Tl-mor means the Supreme Being. Now, add the common Celtic prefix meaning place, and you have Bal-Ti-mor, which, being literally translated, with nothing but the usual inversion to make idiomatic English, reads "God-Place." This paper excited a great discussion, the Rev. Thomas E. Coleman especially speaking against it and in favor of the Read theory, saying, among other things, that the meaning of Baltimore was a Great Fire Altar, and was taken from the town on the coast of Ireland near which was one of the largest fire altars to Baal.

SENATOR KELLOGG'S SEAT.

From the Richmond (Va.) Dispatch, Dec. 16.

There is a time in every contested-election case when contention ought to cease; and it strikes us that that time has come when a Senator is seated by a formal vote of the Senate. We do not pretend to say that Mr. Kellogg ought ever to have been seated. But we well remember that when he was seated we thought it a fair compromise as between the Democrats and the Republicans that he and Senator Butler were admitted simultaneously, or as nearly so as was practicable, seeing that the roll of the Senate had to be twice called. The Republicans accuse the Democrats of acting in bad faith in now attempting to repudiate the terms of what they claim was an understanding between the two sides of the Senate. Whether the Democrats are conscious to this charge or not, we will not undertake to say; but we are inclined to think that there is foundation enough for the charge to make it appear to be a true one to many Republicans and to some Democrats. On the whole, it might be wise for the Senate to put up with Mr. Kellogg's company for a year or two longer. It cannot do much harm to be exceedingly liberal to him.

CARLYLE'S BURNED MANUSCRIPT.

From the London World.

The following interesting anecdote of Thomas Carlyle and the original manuscript of the "French Revolution" is from a correspondent: "In No. 877 of Chambers's Journal, 1880, page 801, it is correctly stated that the manuscript of the 'French Revolution' was carelessly burned. But it is further stated that Carlyle told a Mr. Thomas Aird that he considered the second effort better than the first. This is just the contrary of Carlyle's account made some four years since to the writer of this note. Sitting one evening in the drawing-room of the house in Great Cheyne-row, Chelsea, self and Carlyle were in conversation upon general subjects, when I remarked, 'I have heard that the manuscript of the "French Revolution" was destroyed before going to the printers. Was that so?' Carlyle—Yes, so it was. I was so. Myself—What did you do under the circumstances? Carlyle—For three days and nights I could neither eat nor sleep, but was like a daft man. Myself—But what did you do at last? Carlyle—Well, I just went away into the country; and here he paused a bit of a long laughter, and then said, 'I did nothing for three months but read Marryat's novels!' and after a serious pause he remarked, 'I set to and wrote it all over again!' but in a melancholy tone concluded, 'I dinna think it's the same; no, I dinna think it's the same!'"

LOOKING FORWARD.

THE SOUTH AND THE INCOMING ADMINISTRATION.

From the New-Orleans Times, Dec. 14.

We in this section are tired of shaking our fists at Northern demagogues—we are heading them about hoe-handles or reaching them out wide open for new and wholesome ends. Let the Northern Democrats, who have held fight the national moneys to which, as partners in a re-established Union, we are entitled, spit as much as they may please in the way of vituperation at their Republican brethren. They have few majorities to deliver in political contests and little disposition to succor us in our material interests. Let us announce fellowship with any and all in the Government who so aspire for the Union that every part of the national area may receive, through their co-operation, its due measure of practical encouragement for its workers. When President Garfield and his party will have no excuse for evading their pledges and every honest reason for fulfilling them. But as he is a human being, and his party is composed of human beings, (chiefly,) may we not, if we suffer ourselves to be misled longer by the Northern Democracy, jeopard our prospects and furnish the Administration and its Congressional friends with a new plausible pretext to let us cool alone, despite our representation? A party whose measures and conspicuous leaders are persistently visited with the old staple partisan abuse will be very apt to be unamiable and parsimonious. When a wrong is dealt, time enough to make determined remonstrance; until then let us stand upon our legs and be men. Make better men of Northern Democracy, and deal in that virile manner which will compel respect. The first State right is that of development to the full measure of its agricultural and commercial possibilities.

A SPRIGHTLY OLD LADY ON HER TRAVELS

From the Boston Traveller, Dec. 13.

The longevity of our Cape neighbors is proverbial, as is also their pluck and resolution. These qualities had an amusing illustration on one of the Old Colony passenger trains a few days since. The car was well filled, and comfortably resting well toward its centre was an aged lady, sweet-faced and gentle of mein, accompanied by her daughter. At one of the stations there entered an alert, smart old lady, quick in speech and movement. Taking a seat directly in front of the first old lady, whom she quickly surveyed a few moments, she commenced: "Going far, marm?" "To New-Bedford," was the reply. "Visiting there, marm?" "No; it is on the Cape. I am to visit a daughter in New-Bedford." "May I ask your age?" "Certainly; 84 years." "Well, I declare! Never th

The working of the Arrears of Pensions act begins to show evidence of the extreme costliness of that measure of supposed national justice. The pension appropriation for the year is $50,000,000, and there remains an estimated number of 197,000 arrearages yet to be paid, which, apart altogether from the effect of the admitted claims which they represent on the annual appropriation, will take from the Treasury some $217,000,000. The Commissioner of Pensions is credited with the statement that of the $50,000,000 paid last year $4,000,000 was paid out fraudulently, since under the present system "anybody can get a pension who is willing to take a false oath." From all which it may be inferred that sentimental legislation, even if sustained by certain obvious considerations of justice, is very likely to be bad legislation, and that it is somewhat dangerous for the interests of the people as a whole when the vote of any interested section of the people becomes a very important element in the election of members of Congress.

A private company offer to reclaim the Potomac flats, in front of the city of Washington, without cost to the Government, provided they may have the land reclaimed. On the face of it, this would be considered a good chance for the Government to rid the city of an intolerable nuisance, without expense. But it is suggested, naturally enough, that the land to be reclaimed would be quite as valuable to the Government as to the speculators who propose to get it by expending much money in reclamation. Accordingly, the House Committee on the District of Columbia have decided to procure the insertion in the new River and Harbor Appropriation bill of an appropriation of $1,125,000 for the improvement of the Potomac and the harbors of Washington and Georgetown. The project must run the gantlet in the Committee of Commerce, and in the House. The chances are that the River and Harbor bill will, as ever, lean kindly toward unknown trout brooks and mill-ponds, while the Potomac flats will be left to send up to heaven the fifty-seven distinct stenches which have made the national capital famous.

The valuation of taxable real estate in Jersey City is about fifty-eight millions and a half; the amount of property held by railroad corporations within the city limits, but exempted from local taxation by State laws, is thirty millions. While the tax-payers of Jersey City are paying about $30 on every $1,000 of valuation, and are, under that heavy rate, barely meeting the most necessary expenses of municipal government, the Pennsylvania, Erie, and Central Railroads are entirely escaping their share of payment for the protection which the city is compelled to extend to their property. The grievance of our overtaxed neighbors on the other side of the North River simply illustrates another phase of the great problem of how to bring great corporations under the ordinary restraints of law. The virtual ownership of Legislatures, the paralyzing power of money over all grades of public servants, and the command of the best organizing and intriguing talent which money can buy, place the ordinary citizen at an enormous disadvantage in the struggle against the encroachments of wealthy and unscrupulous corporations. Nevertheless, these bodies would act the part of wisdom in recognizing the fact that the more indefensible their inroads upon public rights the more extreme are likely to be the measures which the people will, sooner or later, adopt for their own protection.

Nothing can be more idle than the talk of further negotiations between the Porte and the Hellenic Government for the settlement of their dispute. Greece has had quite enough experience of that mixture of bluster and deceit which passes for diplomacy at Constantinople, and now she is fully armed and determined, if need be, to regain her northern Provinces by the sword. She is sure to receive from the powers of Western Europe, sooner or later, whatever aid she needs. In no other way can a great Eastern war be prevented, and the powers are united in their desire to prevent or put off that calamity. It is probable that further pressure will be brought to bear upon the Porte, and if that fails, the late successful issue of the Dulcigno complication would naturally suggest a second naval demonstration, a form of persuasion which can be made to assume any required degree of effectiveness.

Perhaps the most curious of the reflex influences of the troubles in Ireland is the reported intention of JOHN KELLY to utilize the influence of the Land League to sustain his waning influence in City politics. Precisely how Mr. KELLY is to bolster up his cause through the sympathy of his followers with the agitation on the other side of the Atlantic does not clearly appear. Perhaps the most effectual method he could adopt would be to transfer his talents to the "owld sod," and in a series of those inimitable renderings of his of the speech and manner of the British nobility make the English rule too odious to live for another day. If Mr. KELLY arrived about the time of the suspension of the habeas corpus act, he would have the double satisfaction of knowing that both friends and foes would hail his imprisonment with delight—the one because it would give him the glory of a martyr for Irish liberty, the other because it would defer the date of his return. As the British Government seems disposed to facilitate the departure of its objectionable subjects to the New World, there is no reason why a perfectly cordial system of reciprocity should not begin with KELLY.

The National Board of Trade, now in session in Washington, has taken up the subject of adulteration of food and drugs. It is high time that this important matter received in this country the attention which it does in Europe. The vigor with which the subject was handled by the Board of Trade yesterday is an indication that there will be something done if Congress will only listen to the appeal which is to be made. It is proposed that a law shall be enacted providing for severe penalties for adulterating food materials or drugs, and specifying what shall be considered adulteration under the statute. Inspectors are to be appointed, and the co-operation of the National Board of Health is to be invited in an attempt to prevent the adulterations which are now spreading disease among the people and substituting worthless preparations for wholesome food.

THE LAWYERS AND THE RAILROADS.

The opinion of Mr. GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS on the legal relation of railroads to the State has been obtained by the Erie Railway Company in the form of an answer to the recent letter of Judge BLACK to a committee of the Chamber of Commerce of this City. The positions taken by these two eminent lawyers, one as the paid counsel of the railway interest, the other as the voluntary advocate of the rights of the people, illustrate the extremes of a controversy which must end either in the control by the State of those agencies of commerce which exist by its creation, and exercise franchises which it has granted, or in the surrender of the whole public to the mercy of a vast combination of corporations responsible to no authority but the will of their managers. Judge BLACK took the ground that railroads are public highways belonging to the State, and operated by corporations chartered for the purpose, and therefore subject to the regulation and control of the State so far as it finds it for the interest of the people to regulate and control them. Though the companies, aided by the State's right of eminent domain, acquire the necessary land from private owners, and pay for it, construct and equip the roads at their own expense, and operate them by the use of their own capital, they do all this through a franchise granted by the State, and have no absolute property in the highways they are authorized to build and to use in their business of transportation. They act throughout as agents of the State, which may at any time resume possession of its own, having due regard to the equities involved, or which may exert its superior authority to compel a conduct of the business in the hands of the companies with proper regard for the public interest. This, we say, is an extreme position, and, notwithstanding Judge BLACK'S citation of authorities, it can hardly be regarded as established by final adjudication.

Mr. CURTIS takes the other extreme. He not only treats the corporations as absolute owners of the railroads in the same sense as a manufacturer owns his mill or a farmer his land, but he takes the ground that their charters constitute a contract with the State which it cannot violate without running against one of the leading prohibitions of the Federal Constitution. If he stopped here his doctrine could not be regarded as at all startling, however much it might be questioned. But he goes on to maintain that unless it is otherwise specified in the charter itself, or unless the State has explicitly reserved to itself in its Constitution the right to repeal or modify it, this inviolable contract gives the companies the right to make whatever charges they may see fit for their service, and to vary them at will. According to this doctrine, they are under no obligation to regard any public right or interest. They are simply carrying on a private business of their own and dealing with their customers in whatever way they may find most expedient or profitable to themselves. They may make any kind of a bargain, grant any sort of discrimination or favor, and exercise over the business of the people all the power involved in a virtual monopoly of transportation without other restraint than their own self-interest may impose. In short, the State, in granting a franchise for building and operating a railroad, brings into being a power to whose mercy its citizens are subject, and has left itself no authority to regulate or control it for their protection. This doctrine is simply monstrous, and therefore we submit that it cannot be public law in any civilized country.

But if we appeal from the lawyers to the courts, we may perhaps be able to ascertain what the true principle is underlying the relation of railroads to the State. The Supreme Court of the United States has had occasion to define this in what are known as the "Granger cases." It has neither held that railroads are public highways owned by the States within which they lie nor that their corporate owners carry on a purely private business with which the State has by contract precluded itself from interfering. Chief-Justice WAITE, in rendering the decision of the court, laid it down as a principle of the common law that "when private property is affected with a public interest it ceases to be juris privati only." Property does become clothed with a public interest "when used in a manner to make it of public consequence and affect the community at large." He goes on to say that when property is devoted to a use in which the public is interested the public acquires a right to control it for the common good to the extent of its interest. He shows that this right extends to the regulation of charges for the use of the property. Even at common law these must be reasonable, but the Legislature may define what is reasonable, and regulate the use of the property in any way that may be for the common good. The result of the whole reasoning of the Chief-Justice is the conclusion that railroad companies are common carriers, using in their business property to which a public interest attaches, and giving the right of public control to the extent of that interest. If railroad charters are contracts with the corporations they certainly do not divest the State and the public of any of the rights and powers inherent in them according to established principles of law, unless these are surrendered in express terms, and there may be doubt as to whether a Legislature can surrender them at all. But to claim that they are surrendered unless expressly reserved is in the highest degree absurd.

CUSTOM-HOUSE ADMINISTRATION.

A letter which will be found in another column states in a concise form some of the grievances of our importers at the hands of the Customs authorities. That they are, on the whole, substantial and should be remedied cannot be doubted; but that they lie within the jurisdiction of the officers of the port is not in every case true. The first of the annoyances complained of by our correspondent is the delay in completing liquidations. This has been very considerable lately, mainly owing to the pressure upon the Custom-house of new business caused by the extraordinary revival of importations during the current year. The clerical force of the Custom-house was for the time overcrowded, and as it is not easy to add new men who understand the work, delay necessarily followed. It is a serious question, however, whether there is not a fault in the organization of the service which accounts, in a degree, for the occurrence of these delays. We do not know how far it might be practicable to create a reserve, or supplementary, force of clerks, who could be called on in emergencies, but it would seem that such an arrangement should be possible. Then, again, it ought to be feasible to provide for an extra pressure of business by working clerks, for the time being, "over hours." That this is done to some extent is true, but that the Customs service, in this City, as a whole, is worked with the same degree of thoroughness, discipline, and activity that is required of men holding corresponding positions in private houses will not be claimed. And we may add that no such degree of efficiency can be obtained until the principle of appointment and promotion for merit only has become completely established, and has been long enough in operation to be recognized by the entire force from the highest to the lowest. When every employe is convinced that his retention and success in his place depend wholly upon his doing his best to discharge its duties, and that no personal or political influence can protect him if he neglects those duties, the amount of work which can and will be got out of the Customs service will be much greater than it now is. It is already showing marked improvement, and will continue to do so the longer the reform rules remain undisturbed.

A second cause of complaint referred to by our correspondent is the payment of duties in gold and silver, or greenbacks and certificates, instead of in certified checks. There is no doubt that this is a good deal of inconvenience to merchants, but it is hardly less so to the officers of the Government, and it is not in the power of these latter to change it. The law requires the payment of duties in coin, or in drafts against the Government for coin held by it. This provision was originally intended to strengthen the credit of the Government by the creation of a fund of coin to meet the interest on the bonds. After the resumption of specie payments, greenbacks being payable in gold at the Sub-Treasury, the Secretary ruled that they could be regarded as certificates of deposits of coin, and that they could be received in payment of duties. But his discretion certainly goes no further than this, if the letter of the law be not strained by even this exercise of it. He cannot authorize the acceptance of certified checks in payment of duties, unless Congress permits him by enactment to do so. The complaint of the merchants lies, therefore, to Congress, and not to the authorities of the Treasury or of the Customs service.

Still another point of criticism made by our correspondent is with reference to the requirement of oaths by importers. This is undoubtedly, in its present form, an excessive requirement without any real utility to justify it. The sole purpose for which such oaths are necessary is to identify the importer to fix upon him definitely the entry which he is required to make. This end would, however, be amply served by such a device as our correspondent suggests, viz.: an oath taken before a notary public, or even a signature made in the presence of one responsible witness. This, again, is, however, a matter fixed by the law, which requires the oath, and which neither the Customs officers nor their superiors can dispense with.

We cannot leave the subject, however, without remarking that most of the difficulties connected with the administration of the Customs spring from the spirit which pervades our Customs laws. This is—to some extent unavoidably—harsh, arbitrary, and suspicious. Practically, the service remains as it was at the close of the war. Very high duties had been imposed under the stress of an immediate need, and all evasion or attempted evasion of these was pursued with the most relentless severity. It was assumed, and not without some justice, that everybody would escape such duties if possible, and the energies of the law were directed to making escape impossible. The duties being not only high, but numerous and complicated, the utmost honesty on the part of the importer, combined with the utmost vigilance and intelligence in the service, would not always suffice to answer exactly the requirements of the law. There may be much done for the improvement of the administration in its details, and particularly in enforcing a system of appointment and promotion which will render discipline and efficiency more easily attainable. But the Custom-house will always remain a source of infinite annoyance, difficulty, and expense, largely unnecessary, to our merchants so long as the Customs duties themselves are unreformed.

EDUCATION FOR THE SOUTH.

The discussion in the Senate of the proposed Education bill will call public attention throughout the country to the matter of popular education and its vital necessity to the Republic. The bill presented is substantially the same which was offered during the last session, designed to constitute an "educational fund" from the proceeds of the sale of the public lands, which is to be appropriated for free popular education, and to be distributed according to the proportion of "illiteracy" revealed by the census in the different States. There is, however, an addition by Senator BURNSIDE, in a proposition to employ a portion of this fund "for the endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education." There was an appearance in the presentation of the bill of the first solid and rational "union" between the sections which has thus far been furnished in Congress. The Senators from New-England presented and defended the bill, though their States will sacrifice their proportion of the proceeds from the sale of the public lands, and see it transferred to the South, while the Senator from Georgia ably supported a measure which must inure mainly to the benefit of the negroes.

Every reflecting man must see that a law of this character is a vital measure for the public security. Members of the Republican Party must feel a peculiar responsibility in having it enacted. It is an axiom in this country that republican institutions cannot endure upon a basis of ignorance. All believe that education is an indispensable condition to the prosperity and success of our effort at self-government. The only districts in the country where democratic institutions have proved, if not a failure, at least as attended by a comparative want of success—we mean the South and New-York City—are just those where illiteracy is most rife. We cannot afford to have any section of the country rest on a basis of ignorance. With this as the foundation, we shall have corruption in public affairs, the ignorant many following blindly the unprincipled few; the property of the well-to-do plundered for the sake of the needy; Communistic efforts by the lowest class, and a constant danger of disorder and revolution. With education of the masses many of these dangers will disappear. To the North, as to the South, the education of the negro is a matter vital to public security. Then the Republican Party have a peculiar responsibility. They accomplished a reform almost unknown in human annals. They suddenly enfranchised four millions of human beings. They did more: for their safety and that of the Nation they gave them the suffrage. It was an act which nothing could justify but extreme necessity. But, having done this, the party are bound by all motives of advantage and honor to protect the South and the country from all the possible evil effects of an immense ignorant mass of voters suddenly thrown into public affairs. The Southern States, after the frightful losses of the war, are evidently unable to carry out any comprehensive system of free education for both whites and blacks. Many of those who have suddenly acquired property at the South, being from other States, are utterly indifferent to the education of any race. The poor whites are probably opposed to schooling the blacks, and many of the former slave-owners care nothing for any effort which shall tend to raise up the old slave class. Enlightened men, indeed, like Senator BROWN, of Georgia, see the importance of training and improving the negro, and will, no doubt, do all they can to move the State Governments toward encouraging and aiding free schools for black and white. But, on the whole, it is not to be expected that the Southern States will accomplish much in providing good free schools for the negroes.

It may reasonably be demanded, then, that the national Government, or, in other words, the free States, shall help them in this great public measure. It is, perhaps, contrary to our ancient policy of leaving internal matters to the States; but the condition of the negro is new, and involves dangers to the whole Union. This particular bill may seem somewhat like an encouragement to ignorance, inasmuch as the more ignorant communities will receive the most; but, then, they need the most help; and if the more enlightened are willing to yield up their share for the ignorant, no one ought to object. It is on the part of the North an expression of real union. It is an offer to share in the burdens of the South, and to aid in removing their greatest danger. It is not a sentimental expression, but a real and wise effort at fraternal assistance. Whether the addition of the clause allowing a portion of the fund to be used for agricultural and industrial colleges is wise may be doubted. If the moneys, for instance, appropriated to Virginia could be used in part for Hampton College, the expenditure would be the best possible. But if, for instance, the State of Louisiana should employ its educational fund for founding a college, when thousands of its citizens could not read or write, we should hold it as a very foolish appropriation. The act perhaps can be amended so as to give some responsible national authority a control over the appropriation of the fund. With this condition, all parties can safely favor the measure.

BOSTON AND THE PONCAS.

Secretary SCHURZ has written a voluminous and good-tempered letter to Gov. LONG, of Massachusetts, apropos of the proceedings of a recent meeting in Boston, in which the Governor took an active part, and in which the wrongs of the Ponca Indians were the theme. Naturally, there was a certain degree of Boston intensity about the speeches and resolutions; and the Secretary of the Interior (naturally, also,) is not a little nettled by the spirit and temper of these outpourings. His letter is an exhaustive review of the whole case, as presented to the mind of the directing head of the Department of the Interior. It is quite possible that some of the kindly intentioned people who have been so zealous in behalf of the Poncas have overlooked the fact that the high officials of the Government are not sitting up nights to compass the certain destruction of those amiable aborigines, nor to right their wrongs when these are discovered. There was perhaps a little too much "thundering in the index" by the good people of Boston, who seemed really to think, for the time, that the globe revolves, and the stars in their courses move, around one central fact—the Poncas and their wrongs. Unhappily, the world is full of outrages that clamor to heaven for righteous judgment.

It should not be understood that we would belittle the weight of suffering which the Poncas have endured. The facts in the case have been repeatedly presented, and in a most temperate manner, in the annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior, and in the able report of the Senate committee, which was drawn up by Senator DAWES. Possibly, much good may be accomplished in Boston by the nervous and somewhat hysterical utterances of the Tremont Temple meeting, but sound policy would seem to indicate a policy in which there should be more of business, and less of calling hard names. We are bound, at least, to give Secretary SCHURZ credit for honest intentions in all this miserable business, and it does not seem fair to impute to dishonest or improper motives a policy which is undoubtedly well meant, although wrong. As the Secretary says, the Interior Department has various and contending interests to consider in deciding what shall be done with any single tribe, or band, of Indians. Is it not surprising that the Secretary, having in view the cost in human life and money of our Indian war, should hesitate to give them back the lands from which they have been wrongfully expelled, or to redress the injuries which he readily admits they have suffered.

The Ponca reserve in Dakota was amply confirmed to them by several treaties. In 1868, however, by what is said to have been a blunder, the reserve was included in a tract ceded to the Sioux. The Poncas continued to occupy their lands, practicing the arts of peace, and living prosperously. They were astonished when they were informed that they must depart to other regions. They had been on unfriendly terms with the Sioux, after the cession of their lands, but had only asked that they should be permitted to join their old friends, the Omahas. By some hocus-pocus, it is said, the head men of the Poncas were represented to have signed a paper asking to be removed to the Indian Territory. They steadfastly deny the authenticity of this document, and, in the light of subsequent events, it appears impossible that the Ponca chiefs ever signed it, knowing its contents. The forcible removal of the Indians, their sufferings, the frightful ravages of disease among them, and their pitiable condition, are all well known to our readers. There has never been any satisfactory explanation of the eviction of the Poncas. Their lands were, as the Secretary of the Interior accurately says, "confirmed to them by treaty," and the Government had no more right to confirm them to the Sioux, subsequently, than it has a right to grant a title in a quarter-section of land to two different persons.

It would appear, then, that the Poncas were removed because their lands had been ceded wrongfully to another tribe; that they were taken to the Indian Territory, rather than to the Omaha Reservation, because $40,000 had been appropriated for this purpose; and had not been taken back to their old reservation in Dakota because it was feared that this step would make trouble. It must be confessed that, to a lay observer not so deeply versed in the intricacies of the Indian problem as the official mind, the easiest solution of the whole difficulty, when the imposition which had been practiced upon the Poncas was laid bare, was to send them back instanter. Some of them broke away from the agent and went back on foot. The others are now represented as pining for their old Northern home. If, as is urged, the Poncas and the Sioux will fight among themselves, it may be said that if the former, the weaker tribe, are willing to take the risk, why not let them go? Some coarse-grained philanthropists think that mutual extermination will ultimately solve the Indian problem. But it is also urged that Congress has not appropriated any money for returning the Poncas. Congress has not been asked to do this; but it has been asked to appropriate $140,000 "to indemnify the Poncas for the lands and other property given up by them," &c., which is a pretty stiff price to pay for the permanent establishment of what is universally acknowledged to be a blunder and an outrage.

It is now said that the Poncas are contented in their new homes in the Indian Territory. What is alleged to be a memorial to that effect, signed by them, has been received in Washington. In view of what has been done with these easily misled people, heretofore, it is not safe to give a straw's value to this document. To ascertain just how much this "memorial" is worth, and what the Poncas really want, the Boston philanthropists proposed that a commission of inquiry be sent to the Territory. And, as the Ponca reserve is a forbidden land, impenetrable to persons suspected of friendship for these misguided aborigines, who do not know when they are well off, the President was asked to send a commission. This he has consented to do, and, naturally enough, it is charged that the Commissioners will be in the hands of Government agents and Government interpreters. The right thing for the friends of the Poncas to have done was to make up their own commission, paying their own expenses, soliciting the co-operation of the Government, and then demanding a safe conduct into the Territory. As it is, they must wait for the report of this novel expedition to the vigilantly guarded territory in which the Poncas are confined.

In looking at the English edition of Harper's Monthly Magazine, with its new cover of appropriate color, with a clever little cut of London above, with St. Paul's, and below that a picture of New-York, with the East River bridge, there is one thing inside which the American reader is glad to see, and that is that full-page advertisements have not been allowed to interpolate themselves in the reading matter. There is nothing more disgusting in the midst of a good story or an essay in an English magazine than to come suddenly upon a page vaunting Brown's soap or Smith's shirt collars, or the Amoor River steel pen. Advertisements, according to our notions in the United States, should be placed before or after the text, and never inside of the magazine. Besides the mental shock, which certainly is of no benefit to the advertiser, the offending sheet absolutely prevents the reading of the next page, and, being in the way, has usually to be torn out. We carry advertisements into unusual places in this country, and are believed to understand it thoroughly. So far there has been something like respect entertained for our best periodicals, and we do not think that any decent periodicals in the United States could be tempted by any amount of pay to admit advertisements inside of their reading matter. We suppose that, if this kind of thing continues in England, and there is no check put upon it, puffs about soaps, or shirt collars, or chocolate will find themselves in time in direct juxtaposition with pages of holy writ.

It may be remembered how that enthusiastic fishculturist, M. CARBONNIER, was indifferent to the siege of Paris, the famine, the shells of the Prussian artillery, as long as his precious gourami were safe. When reduced to his last crust he kept the larger proportion of his bread for the fish. Like BERNARD DE PALISSY, who burned up his last table to heat his pottery kilns with, being too poor to buy firewood, so did M. CARBONNIER kindle a fire with his chairs so as to give his precious gourami the exact warmth they required. When Paris was free from Germans, but threatened by the Commune, M. CARBONNIER left his home, bearing under his arm an aquarium with a few of his fish still alive. If the laws of scientific nomenclature were not so rigid, some poor honor might be conferred on this French fishculturist, and the gourami should be called Ophromenus Carbonnierus instead of olfax. As it is, we learn that the gourami or gouramy, or, as it is sometimes called, the gow-rammy, has been brought to San Francisco by the California Association from China. It is the intention of this association to introduce it into the waters of California, and in time some of the fry or their eggs will reach Washington, when, no doubt, the United States Fish Commission will propagate them for distribution. These fish would be well adapted to the warmer climates of the Southern States, from the Carolinas to Louisiana. The great value of this fresh-water fish is that it grows to a large size and is excellent as food. Belonging to the family Labyrinthi branchidæ, it feeds on vegetable substances. It is a native of Eastern Asia, and has been domesticated in Mauritius and Guiana. One great advantage the gourami has is that it protects its young.

The trouble in the New-York cigar business may be traceable in a certain measure to the manufacturers themselves and to the retailers. Perhaps there is no business in which there is so much opportunity for deception. A good cigar, not all Havana, but fairly flavored, ought to be sold at retail, allowing a fair margin of profit, at from 8 to 10 cents, or 60 per cent. on the wholesale cost. At many shops, at bars, and places of public resort, infamous weeds, with the odors of a smoking brush-heap, which the retailer has bought for not more than $30 a thousand, are sold at 10 cents each, or at an advance of over 200 per cent. The history of the Key West cigar, which has a great deal to do in explaining the present troubles, is about as follows: Ten years or more ago, during the Cuban civil strife, numbers of Havanese cigar-makers left the island. Some intelligent and enterprising Northern cigar manufacturers utilized the opportunity, and established large cigar factories at Key West, employing these Cuban workmen. For material, as good stock as could be bought in the way of leaf was brought over from Cuba and made into cigars in these Key West factories. Gradually the business became a very profitable one, for the cigars were not only well made, but were of good flavor. They were made of the same leaf as was used in Havana, and were manufactured by the same workmen. But gradually, not satisfied with legitimate profit, some of the Key West houses began making cigars into which the least quantity of Cuban tobacco entered, the major part of the stock being derived from the United States. The quality of the goods steadily depreciated, while the original name of Key West cigars was attached to them. Of course, there could be no law enacted to prevent it. As Key West was in the United States, Pennsylvania or Kentucky or Connecticut tobacco could be made into a cigar there and it was still a Key West cigar. But the jobbing houses, like the public, were quick enough to find out the difference, for to-day a Key West cigar, with very few exceptions, is looked upon by the general smoking public with very justifiable suspicion. It is just one of those cases which illustrates the well-known fable—that of the killing of the goose which laid the golden egg.

The prospect that a large portion of the first session of the next Congress will necessarily be occupied by hearing the many contests which will come from the South, recalls the fact that no less than nine cases, which were brought before the present House, are still pending. Of these the most important are the contests of BUSSEY against HULL, of the Second District of Florida; DONNELLY against WASHBURN, of Minnesota, and MACKEY against O'CONNER, of the Second District of South Carolina. The Florida contest, if it is reached, will certainly be decided in favor of HULL, the Democrat, though Mr. BUSSEY, his Republican competitor, has clearly proved that fraud and intimidation of the most outrageous character was used to carry the district for the White League candidate. The now famous Minnesota contest, which was trumped up with the understanding that if the Presidential election was close the Democratic nominee should, right or wrong, be seated by the House, will now in all probability be decided in favor of Mr. WASHBURN, the Republican and sitting member. The verdict of the people in favor of GARFIELD and ARTHUR was so pronounced and unmistakable that Mr. DONNELLY, despite his well-known willingness, will not be called upon to take a prominent part in counting the Electoral vote. The Democratic majority, having no use for him, can afford to be just to his opponent, a gentleman, by the way, who was as fairly elected as any man in Congress. The South Carolina case, the facts in which are now notorious, will, in spite of even pretense of justice, be decided in favor of O'CONNER, the Democrat. Among the other contests yet to be settled is that in regard to the Fourth District of Alabama, from which Mr. SHELLEY counted himself in; the case of MCCLAIN against OTTE, in the Ninth Indiana district; MERCHANT and HERSEY against ACKLEN, in the Third Louisiana; BOYNTON against LOUNS, in the Sixth Massachusetts; YEATES against MAHONY, in the First North Carolina, and O'HARA against EXCUSE in the Second North Carolina. Of these the Massachusetts case will doubtless be decided in favor of the sitting member, and it is understood that the committee will very unjustly report in favor of the Democratic contestant in the case of the First District of North Carolina. It is more than likely that in the rush of business and great confusion which seems to be inseparable from the short session of Congress, the other cases will never be heard of.

The negroes of remote regions of the far South have always been given to great excesses in their religious ceremonies. Indeed, it is a matter of common knowledge in that part of the country that during the progress of their so-called revival meetings many of them, in their excitement, do themselves serious bodily injury. It remained for Texas to supply a company of white people who were capable of committing the same, if not greater, folly. The thriving city of Dallas, in that State, has recently been much excited by the report that what seems to be the remnant of a band of religious fanatics calling themselves Sanctificationists had been practicing many strange and in some cases disgraceful rites in a remote portion of the town. An investigation showed that the reports were true. It was found that for more than a week prior to their discovery, two women, a Mrs. MULLEN and LEZZIE COVELAND, her married daughter, both of whom are spoken of as entirely respectable, had abstained from taking food or nourishment of any kind, their explanation for this strange conduct being that they had been sanctified through their religion and that their bodies required no other sustenance. Frequently during their long fast they seem to have fallen into a peculiar state which can only be described as a trance. On awaking from it they pretended to reveal what spirits had imparted to them. During one of these "trances" Mrs. COVELAND was so violently agitated that she tore her clothing to ribbons, and, falling upon a red-hot stove, was severely burned about the body and arms. A number of men who had also gone without food for days at a time, professed to believe that the revelations of the women were inspired, and for hours listened with the utmost attention to their incoherent ravings. There being every evidence that the enthusiasts, 14 in all, were at least temporarily out of their minds, steps were taken by the authorities to have them confined in the insane asylum.

GENERAL NOTES.

An effort is to be made to raise $50,000 for the purpose of renovating and completing the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Philadelphia.

A whale, weighing over 40 tons, which has been lately exhibited in Boston, is to be taken to Chicago in the expectation of astonishing the people there.

The Troy Press objects to a State park at Niagara Falls because it would be "away out of one corner." This is sad; it would be difficult to remove the Falls to a more easily accessible locality.

The Charleston News claims, as a feather in South Carolina's cap, that it is the first Democratic State to take a pronounced position, by concurrent resolution of its General Assembly, in favor of civil service reform.

The Petersburg (Va.) Index-Appeal rebukes those unreasonable Democrats like Mr. Springer, who have been wasting time in fruitless debate over the Electoral count resolution, to the prejudice of the public business.

The illness of Mr. Reuben Springer, Cincinnati's benefactor, has taken a favorable turn, and his recovery is hoped for. He is 80 years of age, and has been suffering from acute bronchitis and a limited area of pneumonia.

Senator Voorhees is to deliver his lecture on "Thomas Jefferson" in Richmond, Va., on the 22d inst. A cultivated Virginian, who heard it in Washington last Winter, is credited with saying that he could have listened to him five years.

Secretary Dorsey, of the National Republican Committee, is in Denver, Col., and in a conversation with a representative of the Tribune, of that city, has said that the committee is still seeking the instigator of the Morey letter, and that, if it is possible to to find him, that man, no matter what his position, will be made to suffer.

Mr. Edward Bulkley and his wife, of New-Haven, died within an hour of each other, on Wednesday morning last. They had both been ill about a week, the former with bronchitis and other ailments, complicated with old age, the wife with rheumatic ailments (which at last reached the heart) and the infirmities of years. Mr. Bulkley's age was 78 years and 4 months. Mrs. Bulkley's was 75 years and 10 months.

The Lynchburg Virginian promises that the South, and certainly Virginia, will judge Gen. Garfield as President, not by his past conduct, but by what he may say or do as chief magistrate of the whole country. An enlightened, liberal policy on his part, it says, will draw the South much closer to him, and insure a hearty co-operation in every proper measure for the restoration of a real peace between the sections, and the promotion of the welfare of the whole country.

CUSTOM-HOUSE GRIEVANCES.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have talked with several merchants, and they would like if some reform could be made in the Custom-house in regard to the following items: Will you look into the matter? 1. In regard to liquidations which take from three to four months; in one I have just received the entry was made last February, or nine months ago. 2. The taking of certified checks for duties. 3. Permitting merchants to make oath before notaries public or doing away with the oath altogether, making penalties for fraud sufficiently heavy to cover this omission. The present law compels a man to travel down to the Custom-house simply to nod his head to a man who half the time never looks at him.

MERCHANT.

CLOSED FOR WANT OF WATER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Since yesterday the Metropolitan Museum of Art has been entirely deprived of its usual supply of water. The Trustees, after informing the Park Department of the fact, were compelled this morning, to their regret, to close the Museum to the public. It will have to remain closed until the water supply has been restored for a couple of days, as the building is so large that it will require 48 hours to heat it sufficiently to admit visitors.

AN ELABORATE TOMB IN VERMONT.

A correspondent of the Montpelier (Vt.) Watchman describes at some length a tomb now nearly completed in a small rural graveyard in that State. It is situated in the little hamlet of Cuttingsville, a few miles below Rutland. The total cost of the structure will exceed $20,000, and it is being erected at the order of Mr. Beaman, a wealthy resident of Chester, N. Y., and a native of Clarendon, Vt., in memory of his wife and daughter and an infant grand-daughter from whom he has been bereaved by sudden and repeated strokes, and for whom, in his own quiet language, he is building, in cost at least, the house he intended for them. Nearly 100 men have been busy on various departments of the labor for months past. In general character it is a Gothic granite mass, solemn vestibule sheltering the vault that contains the cherished dead. The granite blocks inclosing the sides and the roof are of immense massiveness, that of the roof weighing nine tons. The door is a granite monolith of eight tons weight, designed to be kept closed at inclement periods of the year. At other times the entrance is kept by an open grating door of massive bronze to cost $2,000. The whole interior is of choice white marble, not in pillars or thin scale-work, but in massive blocks, that of the ceiling weighing five tons in a single stone, deeply wrought into domed roof-work, with emblems and tracery of the most elaborate character. The chief features within are statuary memorials of the dead on richly-wrought couches. At the four angles are placed mirrors, so set as to be protected from the elements. The only external statue is

EVENTS IN THE METROPOLIS

THURSDAY RECEPTIONS AND TEAS

EVENTS WHICH CONCERNED THE WORLD OF SOCIETY—TEAS BECOMING POPULAR.

Thursday is very particularly a reception day in New-York society, but for no very special reason, perhaps, beyond the fact that it makes a handsome appearance on cards of invitation. But this season the "tea," which is altogether a simpler affair than the reception, has partially usurped its place and popularity, and there were "teas" innumerable from 3 to 5 P. M. yesterday, and carriages at every third door from Madison-square to the Park, while the floral decorations, and all the varied paraphernalia of the reception proper, were, by comparison, only observed occasionally in the course of an afternoon and evening sauntER. It should not be inferred from the use of the term to designate a form of entertainment that there is any absence of gentlemen at "teas," although there is an absence of decorations and formality which is sometimes delightful. Many gentlemen in society seem that the "tea" is becoming familiar with their sex than the reception, offering kindlier facilities for quiet gossip or conversation of a more serious cast. With ladies of quiet tastes the preference has become a marked one. It requires a devotion to society that is heroic to give ten or a dozen receptions one month, and settle the scores and caterers' bills without wincing; but the "tea" calls for such bills only to a very limited extent, and one can get through two or even three per week very comfortably. A fashionable lady said yesterday afternoon that she had already given 17 this season and expected to give twelve as many more, with a few receptions, before the season closed.

The story of the day's events naturally begins with a very pleasant reception given in the evening at No. 680 Fifth-avenue by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Rutter, Miss Cora H. Rutter, and Miss Agnes Maud Rutter. The floral decorations by a well-known florist of Fourteenth-street were very fine. The principal features consisted of a bow and arrow of Bonsellos, Safrones and Marechal Niel roses, immediately between the parlors; a large harp of similar roses and other cut flowers, and a very pretty umbrella design, the apex being a handsome Bouquet emmanée, the ribs being of Bonsellos and Marechal Niels. Tropical plants and Japanese vases were arranged in pretty designs. The number of handsome large bouquets was particularly to be observed. There was music, and a supper was served in Pinard's best style. Many of the guests were from Philadelphia. Among those present were Mr. Thomas Williams and Judge Henry Hilton, Lieut.-Commander H. Gorringe, Mr. and Mrs. John Hughes, Surrogate and Mrs. Calvin, Mr. and Mrs. William S. Taylor, and Miss Bertie Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Clagborne, Mr. and Mrs. John Irwin, Mr. Frank Thompson, Mr. Strickland Kneass, Mr. John Browning, Mr. Henry McCoon and Miss McCoon, Miss Genevieve Bonnell, Mr. and Mrs. James H. Rutter, Mr. and Mrs. Harper Barnell, Mr. Charles O. Baird, Mr. Matthew Baird and the Misses Baird, Mr. J. N. Du Barry, Mr. and Mrs. William Shattuck, Mr. and Mrs. William Rutter, Mr. Thomas R. Kent, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Ralston, Miss Cindie Cornish, Mr. and Mrs. J. Stricker, Mr. and Mrs. William De Forest and Miss Du Forest, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gunther, Mr. R. L. Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Bostwick, Mr. and Mrs. H. Knickerbocker, Mr. and Mrs. George Lake, Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Thayer and Miss Thayer, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Jesup, the Rev. Cornelius R. Smith, Mrs. Smith and the Rev. McKay Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Williams, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, Mr. and Mrs. M. Hall Stanton, Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Wilcox and Miss Wilcox, Mr. and Mrs. James Talcott, Mr. Charles Benzonine, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George Southwick, Miss Nettie Southwick, Mr. and Mrs. Pietro Moro, Mr. Romeo Moro, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rutter, Mr. Frederick Preston, Mr. Clay Edgar T. Rutter, Mr. William S. Hazeltine, and Mr. Clarence Wray.

Mr. and Mrs. I. T. Williams, of No. 13 West Thirty-sixth-street, gave a reception in the evening to Mr. Mr. Thomas Williams, and his bride, formerly Miss Stott, of Stotterville, N. Y., who were married about a month ago. No decoration was attempted beyond the advantageous display of the very large collection of handsome pictures with which Mr. Williams has filled his residence. These were heartily enjoyed by all present, among whom were many artists and art connoisseurs. There was music, and Pinard furnished the supper. Among the guests were the following: J. Alden Weir, Olin L. Warner, W. Gedney Bunce, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Cottier, Major C. H. Stott, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. William H. Oakley, Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Gregory, Mrs. H. E. Salisbury, Miss Minnie Salisbury, Miss Adele Stott, Miss Louisa Oakley, Miss Carrie A. Brandrum, Mr. H. Fanshawe, Mr. J. Herriman, Jr., Mr. Arthur Deane, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Schindler and the Misses Schindler, Miss S. B. Skeling, the Rev. Arthur Brooks and Mrs. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Allen, Dr. and Mrs. A. Colleson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stedick, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Strang, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Raynor, Mr. and Mrs. Adriance Bush, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Boardman, Mr. and Mrs. George Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Chandler, Mrs. Charles F. Chandler, and Mr. James S. Inglis.

The usual entertainment of the Thursday Evening Club devolved last evening upon Mrs. Delancey Kane, and yesterday afternoon Mrs. Jonathan Edwards, of No. 11 West Forty-seventh-street, received her friends.

Of the "teas" worth a paragraph, that of Mrs. Samuel Smith, No. 288 Fifth-avenue, called together one of the largest society gatherings of the afternoon. There was no floral display. The guests dropped in quietly during the prescribed hours, and tea and chocolate were served. Among the ladies present were Mrs. Bradish Johnson, Mrs. Turnbull, Mrs. Sedgwick, Mrs. Garr, Mrs. Moran, Mrs. Edward Morgan, Mrs. Matthew Morgan, Mrs. Bliss, Mrs. Cothout, Mrs. Manson Schieffelin, Mrs. De Peyster, Miss Lanier, Mrs. Martin, Mrs. Vail, Mrs. Flint, and Miss Lanier. Among the gentlemen were Mr. Lanier, the banker; Mr. Webb, Mr. Murray, Mr. Morgan, besides the usual concourse of young gentlemen.

HONORING THE PORT CAPTAIN.

TESTIMONIAL FROM THE HARBOR-MASTERS TO THEIR CHIEF.

Chester S. Cole, Captain of the Port, was "surprised" yesterday afternoon. The Harbor-masters of the port walked into his office and seated themselves around the room. They all wore their best clothes. Then several gentlemen who are not Harbor-masters entered the office. The Secretary assigned them seats, and they nervously watched the clock as the hands moved toward the hour of 3 o'clock. When the hour was struck by the office clock Gen. H. A. Barnum called the meeting to order, and introduced Capt. Jeremiah Drew, who, he said, wanted "to say something." Capt. Drew drew a large package from his pocket and slowly removed the wrapper while he collected his thoughts. When he reached the heart of the package it proved to be a glass-covered case containing a handsome jeweled gold badge. The badge was in the form of a shield. The State coat of arms was wrought in bas-relief in the centre. Above it was a scroll, on which the name "Chester S. Cole" was wrought in diamonds. The badge was surrounded with a star, the centre of which was a diamond solitaire, surrounded with small diamonds. At the base of the badge was an anchor, flanked by a capstan and a helmsman's wheel. Six gold arrow-heads projected from the upper rim of the shield. The reverse of the badge bore the inscription: "To our Captain: from the Board of Harbor-masters of the City of New-York: Merry Christmas, 1880." In a graceful speech, Capt. Drew presented the jewel to his chief. Capt. Cole nervously responded. He thanked his friends for their kindness. "While I am about it," he continued, "I may as well ask Gen. Barnum to present a testimonial of esteem of our old friends from myself and my associates." There he produced two handsome cut-glass decanters, which were manufactured in Corning, and Gen. Barnum presented them to Mr. Dwight Lawrence. Mr. Lawrence said that "before a Peel-Worthy Patriarch in the Temperance Association," the probability was that he should "fill the decanters with milk." The doors of a rear apartment were next opened, and disclosed a cater-a spreading an ample collation, while a basket of champagne rested on the window-sill. The remainder of the afternoon was continued in feasting and pleasant social intercourse. Among those present were Attorney-General Hamilton Ward, Senator John Birdsall, of Queens; Assemblyman Lamont, ex-Senator Vice-President Chester A. Arthur; Dr. Armstrong, Major William Ballard, Capt. E. G. Tinker, I. J. R. Stark, of the Produce Exchange; Capt. Charles H. Mosell, John Simpson, H. O. Chesebro, Col. Michael Burns, Hugh Allan, Charles F. Berry, Sealip Officer Smith, Capt. Robert Kelly, Capt. Frank Kingsbury, W. W. Cole, Frank Walsh, and others.

MISS DU SAULD GETS HER SALARY.

Some disturbances in the theatrical company employed by James Steele Mackaye, manager of the Madison-Square Theatre, caused Miss Geraldine Du Sauld to cease playing a short time after she had been engaged for the Summer season of 1880 at a salary of $40 per week. She demanded payment until the end of the term for which she was engaged, but it was refused. She then sued Mr. Mackaye, alleging that she had ceased playing only at his request. The suit was then settled. Miss Du Sauld voluntarily retired from the company to allay the dissatisfaction of certain persons interested in the theatre. A jury, in the Court of Common Pleas, gave Miss Du Sauld a verdict for $600 yesterday.

WELCOMING AN ARCHBISHOP.

THE MOST REV. DR. CORRIGAN AT THE XAVIER UNION RECEPTION.

About 200 gentlemen, representing the Bench, the Bar, the banking, and other leading interests in this City, assembled last evening in the club-rooms of the Xavier Union, No. 20 West Twenty-seventh-street, to be presented to Archbishop Corrigan, recently appointed by Pope Leo XIII. as coadjutor to Cardinal McCloskey, in this diocese, and to welcome him to his new charge. Among those present were the Very Rev. Dr. Quinn, Vicar-General, and the Rev. Father Farley, Secretary to the Cardinal; Edmund Breull, Consul-General of France; Bishop John Loughlin, of Brooklyn; the Rev. Fathers Donnelly, Healy, Preston, and McMahon; Eugene Kelly, Robert L. Hoguet, William Laior, Judges Larremore and Alker, Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, William O'Brien, Herbert B. Turner, David McClure, Dr. Samuel Hasell, Francis F. Marbury, Louis De Sebian, Henry Amy, Dennis McMahon, William Lummis, Louis T. Coudert, Joseph F. Mullen, Michael J. Breslin, Justice William H. Kelly, Franklin H. Chandler, Duncan Harris, Prof. Draper, John O'Brien, M. E. Grace, William A. Conway, President Stephen J. Walker, William R. Nelson, Roswell D. Hatch, and John I. Bisten. Music was furnished by F. S. Gilmore's orchestra and the Mendelssohn Glee Club. It was nearly 9 o'clock when Archbishop Corrigan entered the parlor, attired in a purple cloth cassock and cape, with a purple silk girdle and the episcopal gold chain and pectoral cross suspended about his neck. His appearance is youthful in the extreme, and his face genial and pleasant, with abundant evidence of the student in all its lines. He was accompanied by Mr. Hoguet, President of the union, who, in a few appropriate words, introduced him to the company, and called on Mr. Coudert to make an address of welcome. Mr. Coudert, in the course of his remarks, paid a high tribute to the qualities of mind and heart which had led to and dictated the bestowal of such high honors by the Pope on the guest of the evening. He also referred in terms of great gratification to the spirit of tolerance, intelligence, and zeal which had marked the growth of the Roman Catholic Church in America, and especially in this City, and to the mutual spirit of toleration and good fellowship which generally prevailed between the Protestant and Catholic churches, and their clergy, as well as in the community.

Archbishop Corrigan, in reply, thanked the union for its cordial greeting, but said the words in which it was conveyed were far too kind and flattering, and he therefore understood them only as words of encouragement. As Mr. Coudert had said, he and the Xavier Union were not strangers, for he had often in past years been kindly received by them, and had learned something of the good they had accomplished. He thought the union might fairly claim the motto of a famous academy in Italy, "We call the fairest flowers," by the discretion used in selecting its members and the safeguards thrown about the affairs of the society. Mr. Coudert had referred to the subject of religious liberty and toleration, but after all that was no new doctrine in the Church—this doctrine of charity which he advocated so eloquently. It was as old as the Church itself, and he was sure the followers of the Church would try to carry it out in New-York. As theologians, they must remember that, ecclesiastically speaking, New-Jersey was the daughter of New-York. When this diocese was formed, more than 50 years ago, there was not a single priest or parish in New-Jersey, and for 30 years afterward not a diocese was founded in that State. The first Bishop there was taken from New-York, and it might be that in calling back a Bishop from New-Jersey, New-York was only asserting a right to which she might in all justice fairly lay claim. In his case there was nothing to prevent him from coming back with alacrity, though, of course, with fears as to the responsibility of the office. Still, it was very much for the good of their souls if they attended to their present cares and duties, leaving others to take care of themselves, in their own good time. If the work of assisting the Cardinal was all that he had to do he would be the happiest ecclesiastic in America, but much as loved his native State he came here without repining and relying on the clergy and the laity alike to aid him in his labors in this great City.

At the close of his remarks the company was presented to the Archbishop, and the remainder of the evening was spent in social entertainment.

PAINTINGS AND CERAMIC WARES.

MR. SAMUEL V. WRIGHT'S COLLECTION SOLD AT AUCTION.

The paintings in oil and water colors collected by Mr. Samuel V. Wright, of this City, were sold at auction last evening at the Leavitt Art Rooms. Many bidders were in attendance, and fair prices were obtained for the meritorious pictures of the collection. A fine example of J. G. Vibert's work, "The Index," the most prominent feature of which is the figure of a Cardinal reading, brought the highest price—$680. Next in importance was a delightful picture in water-colors, by C. S. Lidderdale, of London, entitled "Footsteps Behind Her." Having been started at $200, the bidding rose in a spirited manner to $400, at which figure it was knocked down. Two excellent drawings by George H. Boughton, of London, "Spring" and "Summer," were also eagerly sought after, and were disposed of for $525 and $270, respectively. Twenty-five New-York artists were represented in the collection. Of the specimens of their work put up by Mr. Somerville, the auctioneer, "Cayuga Lake," by Mr. J. B. Bristol, was the most prominent one, and it was readily sold for $300. Next in importance was Mr. A. F. Bellows's "Salem Turnpike," which brought $145. "Making Love at Capri," by W. Satterlee, fetched $110. The other paintings sold included the following: "The Homicide," August Bouvier of London, $150; "Meeting Old Friends," Emile Adan, of Paris, $100; "Cavaliers Drinking," a sackneyed subject treated with some originality, by O. Detti, of Rome, $130; "Yachts in New-Bay, Morning," Mont Desert," L. C. Tiffany, $50; "Waiting" and the "Four-leaved Clover," Winslow Homer, $80 and $35, respectively; "A Month's Darning," E. W. Perry, $60; "Neapolitan Boatman," J. G. Vibert, of Paris, $55; "Vespers," R. Alldridge, of London, $120; "Mont Desert," William Hart, $95; "Spring in England," A. F. Bellows, $70; "Autumn in England," by the same artist, $60; "Cows in a Stream, James M. Hart, $70; "The Mohawk Valley," Edward Gay, $85; "Palms, Biskra, Algeria," S. Ivelon Gifford, $60; "View in the Adirondacks," William Hart, $75; "After the Cows," Birket Foster, of London, $87; "My Pussy," J. H. Dolph, $60. The total amount realized from the sale of the 98 paintings and drawings constituting the collection was $6,630.

Mr. Wright's collection of Oriental porcelains and other ceramic wares was sold at auction at the same place yesterday afternoon. There were 304 lots in all. An egg-shell Mandarin vase and cover, with decorations in blue, red, and gold, and figures in panels, brought $290. A rose-back egg-shell plate sold for $60, and $61 was paid for a large vase of Japanese porcelain, richly decorated with red and black lace and gold. Another vase fetched $50, and other lots were disposed of as follows: Doulton plaque, with medieval head, $30; Gubbio plaque, blue metallic lustre, from the Castellani collection, $41; Rhodian plaque, gold decoration, $41; Castellani plaque, $40; Chinese porcelain vase, $45; Chinese white porcelain bottle, with figures in rich enamel, $68; Persian tiles, $30 and $35; Oriental jar, blue and white, with panels, $30; blue and white Oriental bottle, silver mounting, $40.

HAMILTON COLLEGE REUNION.

THE ANNUAL ALUMNI DINNER AT THE HOTEL BRUNSWICK.

The Alumni of Hamilton College had their annual reunion, and partook of their annual dinner last evening, at the Hotel Brunswick. The gathering was the largest ever held by the Alumni of the institution, and was as exceedingly agreeable one from beginning to end. A meeting was held in one of the parlors of the hotel before dinner was announced, and the following officers were elected: President—the Rev. Henry Kendall; Vice-Presidents—Henry B. Millard and Emmons Clark; Corresponding Secretary—A. N. Brockway, M. D.; Recording Secretary—James S. Graves; Treasurer—James S. Baker; Executive Committee—Charles H. Truax, Prof. D. H. Cochrane, H. S. Tompkins, George E. Starr, Oliver E. Branch, Chester Huntington. The report of the Treasurer, that he had received and held on to $6 13 since the last meeting, was received with uproarious applause.

About 100 of the Alumni sat down to dinner, at which Prof. Cochrane presided. Among those present were Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, Charles Dudley Warner, Prof. Edward North, Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, Judge Robert Charles H. Truax, the Rev. Dr. Kendall, G. M. Diven, and Prof. Maxx of Hamilton; President Brown, of Hamilton; Horatio C. Birchard, Director of the United States Mint; Edgar A. Emes, Chauncey S. Truax, G. W. Davenport, Dr. W. H. Dwinell, Dr. A. N. Brockway, G. W. B. Dekin, Elihu Root, Prof. S. V. Huntington, Prof. Gerardus B. Docherty, Col. Emmons Clark, D. J. R. Billington, and others. After the dinner, the Chairman called the Alumni to order and congratulated them on the indications of increased interest in the college. He introduced President Brown, who said it was somewhat doubtful in these days to say what a college is. He had heard it defined as an institution where young men rather for athletic exercise, for boating, ball-playing, and other amusements. If that is so, said he, he particularly regretted that Hamilton is behind, although they do something in that way." The inland colleges, while not under the influence of the cities, or convenient to catch the popular pulse, produce a large proportion of the thoughtful judicious, and strong men, who make their mark in the land, as almost any college that can be named. He said that $70,000 had been contributed to the institution last year, to be added to the permanent fund.

Mr. Charles Dudley Warner was introduced, and was heartily applauded. In the course of his remarks he said that American literature is becoming a respected and respectable thing in the world. Not very long ago the charge had come out that American literature was a mere imitation, and a bastard as imitations of England, but as time went on and opportunity offered, we had learned to walk and go alone. Some of them, who had cried the criticisms in the Saturday Review may have expressed regret that they had ever taken pains to undervalue and American literature. Many years ago, said the speaker, we should have felt surprise, regret, and indignation at this. Now, he thought, we had passed that period, and if England cannot understand the background against which our literature is projected—the Puritan background—we could sympathize with them. He had read Beaconsfield's story, and he was prepared to say that Americans could not understand his English ideas or dialect, and diligent readers had found some things in Tom Brown's Rugby that they could not understand. [Applause.] We should persevere in producing a literature of our own. Congress was, he knew, jealous of our literature, but not so much so as for steel. [Laughter.] The soldiers, who, it is said, went to the South and robbed the libraries there, found them full of English literature, full of the monarchical idea.

After Mr. Warner had finished, the President introduced Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, who had been known at college as "the prince of good fellows," and Gen. Hawley made a pleasant address. Remarks were also made by Prof. North, who gave some figures to show where the Alumni are distributed; Dr. W. E. Knox, of Elmira, and others. Letters of regret were received from Gen. Gilbert C. Walker, William A. Cobb, Prof. S. H. F. Peters, the Rev. Dr. Charles S. Robinson, Ellis H. Roberts, the Rev. Dr. T. S. Hastings, the Rev. Dr. W. M. Carmichael, John Jay Knox, Controller of the Currency, and others.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE JOSEFFY CONCERT.

Mr. Joseffy made his second appearance at Steinway Hall yesterday afternoon with the assistance of Mr. Theodore Thomas's orchestra. As a matter of course there was a very large audience present, composed of the many admirers, both professional and amateur, of this extraordinary artist, and a performance which was a delight to all who heard it. The concert was begun with Liszt's posthumous suite "Roma," which was first heard in this country earlier in the season, at Metropolitan Concert Hall, under Mr. Thomas's direction. Mr. Joseffy followed with Chopin's E minor concerto, which he played in his accustomed finished style, the second movement being received with special favor. After Bargiel's overture, "Medea," the pianist gave four solos of Liszt, viz.: "Valse Caprice d'apres Schubert," "Consolation," "Au bord d'une Source," and "Gnomenreigen," in each of which he exhibited his wonderful powers and perfect technique. He was recalled with much enthusiasm, and generously responded with another selection from his extensive repertoire. The concert was concluded by him with the Beethoven-Liszt "Ruins of Athens." It was a delightful entertainment throughout, and an additional triumph for this versatile and most accomplished pianist. It is evident that the musical public appreciates the rare merit of Mr. Joseffy. If there are any doubts as to his position among the few eminent players, there is no question that he possesses a power of fascination in his performance which is irresistible. If he does not overpower his audience by the grandeur and magnificence of his genius, as did Rubinstein, who could play false notes with impunity, Joseffy, with his faultless accuracy, supreme mastery of the piano, delicacy, originality, and withal a manly sentiment, holds his hearers under complete control, and inspires an interest which no other pianist has awakened. The third concert of the season will be a matinée on Saturday, when Mr. Thomas's orchestra will give Goetz's symphony in F major, No. 9, and Mr. Joseffy will play the Beethoven concerto in E flat, and in the second part one of Field's nocturnes, a Schubert-Liszt "Barcarolle," and his own valse, "Souvenir d'Amerique," in addition to the Henselt concerto No. 8, in F minor.

GENERAL MENTION.

The sale of seats for Mr. Lawrence Barrett's engagement began yesterday at the Park Theatre.

Mr. Bartley Campbell's new drama will follow "Matrimony" at the Standard Theatre on next Tuesday evening.

This afternoon the rehearsal of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society will take place, to be followed by the concert to-morrow evening.

The last performances of "The Guv'nor" will be given at Wallack's Theatre to-night and to-morrow afternoon. "Forget Me Not" will be produced for the first time to-morrow night.

At the next Sasfield concert Miss Amy Sherwin will make her first appearance this season at Steinway Hall. The other artists will be Miss Winant, Signor Ferranti, and the members of the Philharmonic Club.

Signor Salvini will perform Hamlet at Booth's Theatre this evening. To-morrow night he will appear in "La Morte Civile." Next week he will repeat his impersonation of Othello on Monday and Saturday evenings; he will appear in "Sullivan" on Wednesday, and in "The Gladiator" on Thursday.

Mr. J. L. Stoddard will give his last two lectures on the Passion Play of Ober-Ammergau at Chickering Hall to-night and to-morrow night. These lectures are dramatic and reverent expositions of the subject, and they acquire additional value and interest from the stereopticon views with which they are illustrated.

To-morrow evening the School Teachers' Association will have their concert at Steinway Hall. The performers will be Mr. Joseffy, Mlle. De Lussan, soprano; Miss Dickerson, contralto; Mme. Sacconi, the harpist of Mr. Mapleson's opera company; Mr. Henry Brandeis, tenor; Mr. Foreman, baritone, and Mr. Charles W. Pratt, accompanist.

Miss Mary Anderson will not make her appearance in any new character until next week, when she will perform the Countess in "Love" for the first time in this City. "Love" is one of Sheridan Knowles's plays, and was in days past a favorite work; Miss Anderson resurrected it not long ago, and has been seen in the leading part in many cities. This performance will be awaited with curiosity and interest. In the meantime her engagement at the Fifth-avenue Theatre presents no novel features. Last evening she appeared as Parthenia in "Ingomar"—on the whole her finest impersonation, strong, graceful, and ardent. Her faults are also less marked in Parthenia than in other characters. Mr. Milnes Levick, a capable actor, was the Ingomar. "Ingomar" will be repeated to-night.

"Lucia" is announced for the last time this season at the opera to-night, with Mme. Gerster, Signor Ravelli, and Signor Galassi in the cast. For the matinée on Saturday "Aida" will be repeated by Mlle. Valleria, Miss Cary, Signori Campanini, Galassi, Novara, and Monti. It will be noticed that Mr. Mapleson proposes to give a concert of great proportions and much attractiveness on Sunday evening. The programme contains Rossini's "Stabat Mater" by Mlle. Valleria, Miss Cary, Signor Campanini, Signor Galassi, and Signor Monti, and in the second part a miscellaneous selection by Mme. Gerster, Mlle. Belocca, Mrs. Swift, Signor Ravelli, and Signor Del Puente. The announcements for the last week of the season are "La Sonnambula" on Monday, "Il Trovatore" for the first time this season, on Wednesday, by Mlle. Valleria, Miss Cary, Signor Campanini, and Signor Galassi, an extra performance of "Marta" on Thursday, and "Don Giovanni" on Friday, Christmas Eve.

ARRESTED FOR ROBBING MR. POST.

Capt. Ryan and Detective Mulcahey, of the Twenty-first Precinct, late last night arrested, at Thirtieth-street and Sixth-avenue, a young man named Peter Pennerich, on suspicion of being one of the men who, on the morning of the 20th ult. robbed Mr. George Post of a diamond breast-pin valued at $1,800. Mr. Post, who is an old gentleman, lives on his income at No. 1,819 Broadway. He is somewhat lame and while passing along West Forty-fifth-street toward Eighth-avenue on the morning in question, and when opposite the Church of St. Mary the Virgin he was suddenly attacked by two young men, one of whom snatched the diamond breast-pin from his shirt-bosom and made off with it, followed by his confederate. They were chased to Seventh-avenue by some of the passers-by, but on reaching the avenue ran off in different directions and escaped. The arrest of Pennerich has been the first one made in the case. Mr. Post was informed, and called at the East Thirty-fifth-street Police Station to identify the fellow. He was not sure of his identity last night, but will be given an opportunity to-day to see him by day-light, when he believes that he will be able to recognize him if he was one of the men who robbed him.

SINGULAR ACTIONS OF A CHILD.

From the Donaldsonville (La.) Chief, Dec. 11.

A little girl created a decided sensation in the lower part of town one day last week by running up and down the middle of St. Patrick-street, crying out and gesticulating wildly, and finally rushing into a house and deliberately throwing herself into the fire-place head foremost. Most of those who witnessed her demonstrations were so seriously burned for want of assistance had not little Henry Duke, the Chief's carrier-boy, with presence of mind especially commendable in one so young, run into the house and dragged the girl from the fire-place before she had sustained any injury beyond the scorching of her hair. The victim of this peculiar attack was put to bed, and, in a short time, after several hysterical spells of laughing and crying, seemed fully recovered and in perfect health.

A SHOCKING STORY.

PARTICULARS OF WEDNESDAY'S MURDER AND SUICIDE IN ALBANY.

From the Albany Evening Journal.

A tragedy of a terrible nature occurred in North Albany last night. The victims were Sarah Traver, alias Kate Smith, aged 26, and Charles A. Burt, aged 30, a maltster by occupation, and son of the late Uri Burt, who for many years conducted the malt-house and brewery on Broadway, lately occupied by James Walker. The former was killed by a single shot fired by Charles, who then turned the weapon on himself, fired three shots, and fell dead near his victim. All this occurred at Burt's house, No. 25 Genesee-street. These are the main facts of the tragedy, but the particulars may be detailed as follows: Burt, who was formerly in prosperous circumstances, had for years led a somewhat dissipated life. He was well known about town, and traveled with a set of young fellows of ample means, who were sowing their wild oats. Lately, he had withdrawn himself almost entirely from his old associates, but his habits were not corrected. Some six or seven years ago he was married to an estimable young woman, who has since borne him two children, and it is said was about to bear him another. The children are 3 and 5 years of age, respectively. Some two years ago Burt became acquainted with Sarah Traver, a handsome brunette, with long flowing black hair, and finely built. From that time forth he seemed to have become infatuated with her, and deserting his wife and children for days at a time, would spend them in the company of the siren. Pleading and remonstrance were equally in vain to restrain him in the course of honor, and finally, last Winter, his wife left him and returned to her mother. She remained there several months, when Burt, having recovered his senses somewhat, became reconciled with her, and they moved into the house No. 25 Genesee-street on the 1st of last May. The wife hoped that he had fully reformed, and she was desirous of doing all in her power to keep him in the right path. It was in vain, however, for after a few months Burt again became enslaved in the meshes of the siren, and sought her society as before. Yesterday he had been drinking, and, as supposed, spent the earlier part of last evening in a carousal with the woman Smith. At any rate, he, in company with Kate Smith, as she was generally known, went to the front door of his home on Genesee-street, a neat little two-story frame structure, and knocked for admittance. His wife at the time sat at the front window, undoubtedly waiting for his return home. Seeing the woman with him Mrs. Burt was averse to opening the door. He knocked all the harder, and in a loud and commanding tone of voice ordered her to open the door, she replied that she would not him in, but would not allow that women to again cross the threshold of her husband's dwelling. Upon this and the woman walked away down Genesee-street, but just where they went to, or what transpired between them, is not and never will be known. In about 15 minutes, however, he and the woman returned, and he again knocked on the door and demanded admittance, but was again refused. He then deliberately kicked in the door, and, together with the woman, entered the house, proceeding directly into the kitchen. He had evidently a preconcerted plan to kill her, for no sooner had they entered the room than Burt thundered to her in a loud tone of voice to get down upon her knees and pray her soul, for he was going to kill her.

Burt's wife, in the meantime, came from the front room into the kitchen and attempted to remonstrate with her husband, but he would not listen to her; in fact, paid no attention to her whatever, appearing desperate, if not insane. The woman Smith fell upon her knees as ordered, at the same time exclaiming, "If I have got to die, Charley, I will die in sin," appearing perfectly resigned to her fate. Burt then, without further warning, pulled out a revolver and deliberately fired, the ball taking effect in the woman's head, directly over the left ear, and producing a wound that caused instantaneous death. The woman at the time had all her outer garments on, including a heavy cloak, a fur boa wound around her neck, a muff by her side, and a jockey upon her head. As she fell the jockey rolled under the stove, and the blood spurted in crimson floods upon her clothing and upon the floor. As she fell, Mrs. Burt, who had been a dazed, awe-stricken, and powerless witness of the horrible deed, ran into a small, dark bedroom, adjoining the kitchen, where her children were sleeping, moaning in fear, and with a terrible dread that her desperate husband would kill her children, and, perhaps, herself.

After his wife had left the room, Burt immediately raised the pistol, pointed it at his own head, and fired three shots in rapid succession. The first one entered his head just over the right eye, and the other two entered the side of the head directly over the right ear. He fell to the floor and expired immediately, the brain and blood oozing from the ghastly wounds in his head. His wife ran out of the house, accompanied by her children, and went to the house of the next-door neighbor, Mr. Nelson Rivenburgh, to whom she breathlessly related what had happened. As nearly as can be learned, the poor wife ran out of the house just as Burt had fired the last shot. The neighbors, including Rivenburgh and Albert Bennett, were aroused and hastened into Burt's house, only to find the woman's story only too true. Burt was found lying on the floor, his feet under the dining-room table, which was still spread with the remains of the evening meal. The murdered woman lay with her bloody and ghastly head toward the stove, about four feet from Burt. Both evidently died instantly.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.

From the Buffalo Christian Advocate.

This ably conducted paper stands at the front of secular journalism.

From the Middlebury (Vt.) Journal.

The leading Republican paper of the country, fully equal to the best, and surpassing in some particulars.

From the Hartford (Conn.) Times.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES is a Republican party paper, yet it is independent to rebuke when it sees fit. It is a very ably conducted journal, and those who want a Republican paper from the commercial centre, can do no better than to subscribe for THE TIMES.

From the New-Brunswick (N. J.) Fredonian.

THE NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES is a most excellent newspaper—pure, clean, bright, newsy—containing all the important news of the day served up in a readable style, and free from that "sensationalism" which mars so many otherwise good publications. In fact, it is a model newspaper, and should be in the hands of all who desire a daily newspaper, and this should include every person.

From the Lansing (Mich.) Republican.

For early and correct news, and the independent discussion of all subjects within the scope of honorable journalism, THE NEW-YORK TIMES is not excelled. We read it with increasing pleasure and benefit from year to year, and even when the Winter mails are dilatory and our copies of the daily are old on their arrival, we had rather peruse them than inferior newspapers of later date.

From the Meriden (Conn.) Republican.

If every newspaper in the country was conducted upon the principles of THE TIMES, getting reliable news at the earliest moment, the very best class of literature could be seen only in the American press. As a vehicle of political news, THE TIMES has no superior. Its devotion to the principles of the Republican Party has been always consistent, never being wedded to any member, clique or faction of it.

From the Reading (Penn.) Dispatch.

That stanch and fearless Republican journal, THE NEW-YORK TIMES, is maintaining its well-earned supremacy, and is yearly growing in popularity. It fully meets all the demands of the day, great and constantly increasing as they are. THE TIMES has not only the courage or its convictions, but is able and dignified in discussion, pure and unprejudiced in statement, and always judicious and patriotic in its utterances.

From the Yonkers Statesman.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES, of all our great dailies, is unquestionably the most stalwart and fearless champion of reform. It would be hard to put a just estimate on the services THE TIMES has rendered to the country, and more particularly to the City of New-York. Its leading editorials are models of ability, while the collection of news THE TIMES has no superior. Its circulation in Yonkers is large, and we are happy to say deservedly large.

From the Waterbury (Conn.) American.

As good and perfect a newspaper as THE NEW-YORK TIMES is quite good enough for any intelligent people. THE TIMES is established as one of the most enterprising and comprehensive journals of the day, not given to sensationalism, usually well poised politically and otherwise, of great ability and correct and exhaustive in its home and foreign news, with a corps of correspondents and writers of the first quality.

From the Elizabeth (N. J.) Journal.

THE TIMES is a sturdy and sterling Republican paper, edited with a rare ability, and with particular influence in its news columns. It is the master of a clear, copious, and admirable English style which characterizes all its departments, and its terse and clear editorials show study, accuracy, originality, and variety. It is essentially a family newspaper, and to those who subscribe for Sunday papers its Sunday issue is especially commended as being a treasure-house of the best reading matter, besides being a full and complete newspaper.

From the Easton (Penn.) Free Press.

Among the leading journals of the day, and one whose wide circulation has made it familiar to every eye, is THE NEW-YORK TIMES, a solid paper, full of news, full of information on all points. Upon political, literary, financial, commercial, and religious matters its opinions are always clear, just, and worthy. Though bold and fearless in its editorial comments, it never diverges from strict facts and strong, substantial reasoning, being unbiased and unled on any subject. For financial articles and information, it

THURSDAY, Dec. 16—P. M.

The share speculation opened strong and generally higher, and in the early dealings prices advanced ¼ to 7/8 cent. for the general list, and 10¼ @ cent. for Houston and Texas. Rock Island led the improvement in the general list, St. Paul and Omaha, Northern Pacific, Lake Shore, the Grangers, Pacific Mail, Lake Erie and Western, and the St. Louis and San Francisco stocks being also very prominent in the upward movement. During the afternoon Houston and Texas fell off 7¼ @ cent. from the highest point, but the general market was very firmly held until shortly before the close, when some realizing sales caused a fractional reaction from the best figures of the day. The bear movement in Western Union was continued, and was accompanied by various rumors calculated to induce timid holders to part with their stock; large blocks of the shares changed hands, and at the close a decline of 4-@ cent. was established. American District Telegraph was also notably weak and fell off 10¼ @ cent.

The transactions aggregated 543,104 shares, including 78,800 Western Union, 42,000 Erie, 32,700 Union Pacific, 30,000 Lake Shore, 31,200 St. Paul and Omaha, 31,000 Pacific Mail, 29,900 Hannibal and St. Joseph, 35,300 St. Paul, 24,100 Northern Pacific, 21,000 Lake Erie and Western, 19,900 North-west, 14,900 New-Jersey Central, 11,900 Central Arizona, 10,300 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 9,800 Kansas and Texas, 9,500 New-York Central, 9,200 Wabash, Pacific, 8,900 Michigan Central, 7,000 Ohio and Mississippi, 6,900 St. Louis and San Francisco, 6,100 Ontario and Western, 5,900 Iron Mountain, 5,100 Canada Southern, 5,100 Reading, 4,600 American District Telegraph, 4,100 Houston and Texas, 3,600 Rock Island, 3,600 Nashville Chattanooga, 3,400 Delaware and Hudson, 2,800 Manhattan Elevated, 2,300 C., C. The Money market worked very smoothly throughout the entire day, and but few transactions were effected higher than 6 @ cent. In one or two instances, however, commissions of 1-64@1-32 of 1 @ cent. in addition to legal interest were paid for accommodation, but these figures were very exceptional, and in the late dealings there were large offerings of capital at 3@4 @ cent., the closing quotations being 3 @ cent. Time loans ruled at 6 @ cent. Prime discounts are unchanged. The following were the rates of domestic exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, buying 3-16, selling 3-16@ par; Charleston, buying ¼ discount, selling par @ ¼ discount; New-Orleans, commercial 300 discount, bank par; St. Louis, 1.10 discount; Chicago, 35 discount; Boston, par.

The foreign advices reported British Consols at London strong and higher at 99 9-16 for money and 99 15-16 for the account. In United States Government bonds new 4s sold at 116¾, ex coupon; 4¾s rose ⅛ @ cent., to 115¾, and 5s declined ¼ @ cent., to 104¼. American railway securities were generally strong and higher; Erie common advanced from 48¾ to 49; do. consolidated Seconds receded from 101¾ to 101¾; Illinois Central rose from 125¾ to 126¾; Reading from 26¾ to 26¾; Central Pacific from 67¾ to 67¾; Atlantic and Great Western Firsts from 33¾ to 33¾; do. Seconds from 20¾ to 20¾; St. Louis and San Francisco common from 44 to 44¾; do. preferred from 60¾ to 62¾; do. First preferred from 89¾ to 90; do. Bar Silver declined ¼@ @ ounce to 51¾d. This was setting day on the London Stock Exchange. The sum of $12,000 in specie went into the Bank of England on balance to-day; the statement of the bank for the past Saturday week shows a decrease in specie of £178,000, but the proportion of the reserve to liabilities was raised from 44¼ @ cent. to 45 7-16 @ cent.; the rate of discount at the bank remains unchanged at 4 @ cent. At Paris, Rentes advanced from 84f. 55c., at last cost, to 85f. 10c. The Bank of France during the past week lost 130,000f. in gold and 1,385,000f. in silver.

In the Sterling Exchange market the nominal asking quotations were unchanged but a better tone prevailed in actual business, and higher prices were paid for all classes of bills. This was chiefly owing to the easier working of the money market, and with low rates of interest prevailing, an advance in sterling is to be anticipated. The following was the basis on which actual transactions were effected: Sixty-day bills, $4 77¾ to $4 78¾; demand, $4 81 to $4 81¼; cable transfers, $4 81¼ to $4 81¾; commercial bills, $4 78 to $4 78¾.

The Government bond market was active, more especially for the 4½s and 4s. The closing quotations were unchanged, with the exception of an advance of ¼ @ cent. in 5s, coupon, and 4s, coupon. Railroad mortgages were in brisk demand at advancing quotations: Erie consolidated Seconds advanced from 97¾ to 98¾, and closed at 98¾; do. funded 5s rose from 93¾ to 94; Chesapeake and Ohio 6s, class B, sold up from 76¾ to 77¾, and closed at 77¾; do. currency 6s advanced from 45¾ to 45¾, and receded to 45½; Kansas and Texas Firsts fell off from 111¾ to 111¼, and advanced to 112; Lake Erie and Western Firsts advanced from 107¼ to 107¾; do. incomes sold up from 68 to 71, and closed at 70¾; New-Jersey Central Consols assented rose from 118¾ to 118¾, and do. adjustments from 111¼ to 113; do incomes advanced from 98¼ to 98¾, and reacted to 94; Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern sold up from 99 to 99; Canada Southern guaranteed Firsts from 101¾ to 102¼; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy 5s from 130 to 130¾; Denver and Rio Grande Firsts from 110¼ to 111; do. constructions from 109¾ to 110; International and Great Northern Firsts from 108¼ to 108; do. CHARLES P. CLINCH DEAD

HIS THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS IN THE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

SURVIVING THIRTEEN ADMINISTRATIONS—RETIREMENT FROM OFFICE WHEN NEAR 80—THE GREAT VALUE OF HIS SERVICES—HARDLY LIVES—MRS. A. T. STEWART'S ONLY SURVIVING BROTHER.

Charles Powell Clinch, the only surviving brother of Mrs. Alexander T. Stewart, and the only Assistant Collector of the Port that New-York City ever had, died at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, at his late residence, No. 5 East Thirty-fourth-street. He was out riding the previous afternoon, and in the evening entertained his sister at tea. When she left him he was apparently in his usual health. At 9 o'clock he was taken with convulsions arising from an attack of gout—to which he had long been a sufferer—in the stomach, and he never rallied. He was born at No. 67 Pine-street, in this City, Oct. 30, 1797, and was, consequently, in his eighty-fourth year. His father, James Clinch, was a wealthy ship-chandler, who by his first wife had four children, viz.: James, Charles P., Maria, who never married, and Cornelia, the widow of the great dry goods millionaire. Mr. Clinch was left independently well off by his father's death, and did not engage in active business during his young days except for a short period, when he held a subordinate position in the City Bank. He was through life a pronounced Democrat, and at the time spoken of and afterward took an active interest in politics. He was elected to the Legislature in 1824, 1826, and 1828, serving with such men as William L. Marcy, Silas Wright, and Preston King. Previous to this he had acted for a while as City editor of the Aurora, one of the early New-York newspapers, then published in Wall-street, and during his time he contributed anonymously a series of political articles to that paper, exposing and unsetting the plans of the Whigs, which attracted a great deal of attention. In 1840 he was a Sachem in Tammany Hall.

A large part of Mr. Clinch's inheritance was invested in insurance stocks, which were rendered valueless by the great fire of 1835, and it was in consequence of this misfortune that he accepted a position in the Custom-house. He was appointed an Inspector of Customs by Collector Jesse Hoyt on March 20, 1832, Martin Van Buren being then President. On April 28, 1838, Collector Hoyt promoted him to a Deputy Collectorship, which he held until 1857, when Collector Heman J. Redfield made him a special deputy, with power to act in the Collector's absence. On March 17, 1866, Collector Hiram Barney created for him the position of Assistant Collector, from which he resigned on Nov. 6, 1876, to take effect Nov. 30 of that year. No one has since been appointed to that place. From Nov. 13, 1866, to May 16, 1866, he filled the office of Collector, rendered vacant by the suicide of Preston King. His intimate friend, John Van Buren, sought to have him formally appointed Collector, but he refused to accept it, on the ground that he would be compelled to forfeit his independence. He was twice offered a Collectorship by President Polk, and on an address in which they styled him the Nestor of the United States Customs service. Mr. Clinch thus held continuous office in the Custom-house for over 38 years, under no fewer than 13 Administrations of different politics. His resignation was brought about through the entreaties of his sister after the death of her husband, which occurred in April, 1876. She made him a present of the house in which he died, and furnished it for him. He had previously resided at Stapleton, Staten Island, where at his death he still owned a handsome residence and grounds. Since that time he has taken no active part in politics or business. He was twice married. His last wife died about 10 years ago. He leaves an adopted daughter, who is unmarried.

Mr. Clinch was looked upon as possessing more knowledge on the subject of American Customs revenue, and navigation laws than any other living man, and his judgment was always trusted implicitly by his associates in office. This fact and his sterling integrity made his retention a necessity under successive Administrations, although his bluntness and independence of character was such as to wound and over again caused the speedy removal of a less valuable public servant. Many anecdotes are told by his old colleagues illustrative of this and other of his distinguishing traits. Special Treasury Agent Joyce once informed him that he was about to take proceedings against his brother, now dead, for violation of the revenue laws. The old gentleman, without moving a muscle, responded: "Well, Sir, if he is guilty let him be punished like any one else." When the news of Lee's surrender was received in this City, Mr. Clinch seized an American flag, and, rushing into the rotunda, sang "The Star Spangled Banner" from beginning to end. His tastes were always of a marked literary character, and he was a devoted friend of art and the drama. Among his intimate friends were Fitz Greene Halleck, the poet; the late James Gordon Bennett, Thurlow Weed, Micah Stebbins, the sculptress, and many others of like distinctness. He was the poet of no mean ability, and copies of a volume of scattered pieces which he once published have sold at auction as high as $25. He was the author of three dramas, one of which, entitled "The First of May in New-York," was performed with success on the boards of the old Broadway Theatre. He also contributed largely to the press. There were not many better Shakespeare scholars in the United States than he. He knew the great poet's works by heart almost from end to end, and took pleasure in reciting them by the hour on the slightest provocation. In addition to his other accomplishments, he was an excellent extemporaneous speaker and a first-rate amateur actor. Dr. John Hunter T. Stewart admired him heartily, and was during his life his warm friend. His funeral will take place on Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock from the Church of the Incarnation. His remains will be taken to Stapleton and buried beside those of his second wife in the Moravian Cemetery there. A meeting of the heads of departments was held in the Collector's room in the Custom-house yesterday afternoon to take suitable action respecting Mr. Clinch's death. Collector Merritt presided, and in stating the object of the gathering spoke of him as "one of the best officers ever appointed to a position here, and one who, without regard to personal or political associations, commanded the confidence and regard not only of his associates but also of the business community whose duties brought them in contact with him." On motion of Gen. Palmer, a Committee on Resolutions, consisting of the Collector, Deputy Collector Wynkoop, Chief of the Correspondence Bureau Trefor, Naval Officer Burt, and Mr. Nelbaur, an old Custom-house broker, was appointed to draft appropriate resolutions. After they had left the room to embody speeches made by Gen. Palmer, Deputy Collector Briggs, and Deputy Collector Wynkoop. The last-named, who was Mr. Clinch's associate for many years, spoke of him as a very kind-hearted man, who was always ready to do another a service and to forget anything unpleasant that might have occurred in his intercourse with his fellows; as a very thorough man, who for years after his first appointment to office made a special study of the laws appertaining to it; as a very precise man, particularly in the use of language, always saying exactly what he meant and could prove, and as a sturdily honest and fearless man, ever maintaining firmly his convictions of what was right and just. These, Mr. Wynkoop said, were the salient points of Mr. Clinch's character as he knew him. The resolutions were unanimously adopted, as many of the Custom-house officers as can do so will attend the funeral.

AIDING THE POOR CHILDREN.

The Children's Aid Society have issued their annual Christmas appeal for poor children, and ask for donations of money to purchase food and clothing for the destitute little ones under their care. The society supports 31 industrial schools, open to all children who cannot attend the public schools. They maintain six lodging-houses, three free reading-rooms, a sick children's mission, and in the Summer a home at Bath, Long Island, for poor children. The work of the year is given by the society as follows: There were during the past year in the six lodging-houses 18,463 different boys and girls, 292,387 meals and 166,537 lodgings were supplied. In the 21 day and 11 evening schools were 9,080 children, who were taught and partly fed and clothed. MEETING OF THE FIELD TRIALS CLUB.

The Eastern Field Trial's Club held its first regular meeting, after the running yesterday afternoon, at No. 94 Park-place. The Committee on the Preston Fund reported that $815 had been raised. The following were elected members: J. H. Slosson, J. De Forrest Grant, R. C. Corsall, E. S. Bloodgood, of Providence; Newton Earle, B. M. Earle, J. Renkhardt, Dr. S. Fleet Speir, and Charles Fiske. Messrs. J. E. Young, G. B. Grinnell, Col. J. Gordon, of Middletown, and Col. S. D. Bruce were elected honorary members. Mr. G. M. Pasford the owner of the setter Iron Duke, handed in a power protesting against any dog running in the Club stakes that had been entered for them after Nov. 15. The entries for the match, which was to be run on the 4th of December, were to close on the 25th November. An effort was made to keep them open until the day of the match, which was referred back to be heard until the 25th last. On that day Mr. Jacob Funk went to Robbin's Island with his dog, which in the sweepstakes for Indoors he ran the dog and claimed a walk-over. Mr. Bamford said that on the 15th he had telegraphed to his dog to be in a dangerous condition of some length followed. A notice to have the Club Stakes run on Tuesday, the 21st inst., was lost, and it was finally decided to declare the running of the Club Stakes impracticable, and to refund the stakes to the subscribers. Then followed the nominations for officers for the next year. The President, Dr. H. P. Aten, was renominated, but he absolutely declined to run, and the following were then nominated: John G. Heckscher, J. O. Donner, C. Du Bois Wagstaff, and Col. Jacob Pentz. Among those nominated for Vice-Presidents were Dr. S. Fleet Speir, Charles H. Raymond, H. W. Livingston, R. B. Roosevelt, and R. C. Cornell. George F. Leach was nominated for Treasurer.

A NEW PASTOR INSTALLED.

SERVICES IN THE LEE-AVENUE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Yesterday was the day appointed for the assembling of the Congregational Council in the Lee-Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, to examine the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, formerly a member of the Rock River Methodist Conference, and to install him in the pastorate of the church, if he was found sound in doctrine. In accordance with the call, about 20 Congregational clergymen assembled yesterday afternoon. Among those present were the Rev. Messrs. H. S. Carpenter, H. M. Scudder, R. P. Hubbard, T. R. Sliker, S. D. Halliday, W. R. Davis, S. H. Virgin, A. P. Foster, A. H. Bradford, Richard G. Green, Samuel Scoville, W. M. Barbour, H. M. Storrs, Edward Beecher, and Lyman Abbott. All the churches invited to take part in the Council were represented except the Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs's church, and the church at Orange Valley. The Lee-Avenue Church is a very large one, but it is not large enough to hold Dr. Storrs and a representative of Plymouth Church at the same time. Dr. Lyman Abbott called the Council to order, and the Rev. W. R. Davis was elected Moderator. The Rev. H. M. Storrs made the opening prayer. After some preliminary discussion the Secretary read the church record, showing the call that was extended to Mr. Crafts, and the letter accompanying the call. The letter expressed a belief in God, in the Holy Spirit, the inspiration of the Scriptures, baptism, the Lord's Supper, the resurrection of the dead, and punishment of the wicked after death—a creed that seems to cover the ground pretty fully. After some discussion as to the regularity of Mr. Craft's dismissal from the Rock River Conference, and as to his belief, Mr. Storrs moved that the papers submitted be considered perfectly satisfactory, and that the examination be proceeded with. This motion was carried, and Mr. Crafts read a statement of his belief, saying that he came of Christian parents, had always lived under Christian influences, had made a profession of religion when he was 12 years old; that he began preaching in 1867, and that he thought the Congregational the best form of church government. A number of questions touching his belief were then asked of Mr. Crafts by the members of the council. "I intend," said Mr. Crafts, "to obey the laws of Congregational fellowship." It was then decided that the examination, having been satisfactory, should be suspended. A congratulatory letter from the Rev. Dr. Eggleston was read, and it was ordered that the new Pastor should be installed the same evening. This programme was carried out, the church being well filled. The Rev. Lyman Abbott preached the installation sermon, the Rev. H. M. Scudder made the address to the Pastor, the Rev. William L. Barbour made the address to the congregation, and the Rev. Mr. Bradford made the installation prayer.

ON TRIAL FOR COUNTERFEITING.

AWAITING THE VERDICT IN STANLEY'S CASE—RUNYON OBTAINS BAIL.

George Stanley, who is married, and lives at Seventy-sixth-street and Second-avenue, was placed on trial yesterday before Judge Benedict, in the United States Circuit Court, on an indictment accusing him of making and having in his possession, with criminal intent, counterfeit silver coin of the description known as trade dollars. He was arrested in May last near, and just after leaving, his residence, and the Secret Service officers found in his house a number of bottles, acids, files, and other materials, and on his person a package containing $100 worth of trade dollars. It was then the last day it was contended by the Government that the implements were used in making counterfeit money, but the defense insisted that Stanley was an amateur photographer, and used the aforesaid articles in that work. In furtherance of this theory they produced an improvised camera obscura, made of the body of an old accordeon, a piece of stove-pipe, and some window-glass. Judge Benedict, however, ruled out all of these remarkable tools as irrelevant, and the prisoner was tried for having the money in his possession. The prisoner testified in his own behalf that he did not know the contents of the package, and that it had been given him to deliver to a third person. The person who gave it to him was a laborer named Donnolly, who appeared and testified that the package was handed to him by a boy, whom he did not know, with the request that it should be given to Stanley, and that Stanley should be requested to deliver it to a person familiarly known as "Billy." The jury, having failed to agree after a retirement of about three hours, was locked up for the night, with instructions to return a sealed verdict this morning.

William Runyon and William Spike, two members of the gang of counterfeiters arrested in this City and Brooklyn last week, were arraigned yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields. Runyon waived examination, and was admitted to bail in the sum of $10,000 to await further examination next week. His sureties are John S. Harmer, of Newark, Greene County, N. Y.; George W. Hill, of No. 106 Rapelye-street, and Michael Moran, of No. 143 Summit-street, Brooklyn. Runyon denied that in his transactions with the detective, Van Horn, he had ever seen any counterfeit money, though he admitted that they had conversed about counterfeit money which Van Horn had said was shortly to be bought. In this connection, however, he said he told Van Horn, whom he knew under the name of Smith, that he did not think it was a safe business to go into. A number of witnesses testified that they had known Runyon for many years, and that he was a man of good character.

TERRORIZED BY ROUGHS.

The laborers employed on the reservoir now being built at Kensico, Westchester County, for the new water supply of this City, were paid off on Wednesday. About midnight on Thursday a number of them visited the village of White Plains, and commenced spending their money freely in all the bar-rooms they could find. They fell in with some of the roughs of the village, "treated" them, and soon the whole crowd was under the influence of bad rum and gin. They had a number of brawls along Railroad-avenue, and their boisterous talk alarmed the neighborhood. Four of the gang, when opposite the residence of the Rev. F. B. Van Kleek, Rector of Grace Church, had a hot dispute, and an attempt was made to rob the only male member who had any money left. He ran on to the front stoop of the rectory, the others remaining out on the sidewalk, and rang the bell violently, waking up the family and very much alarming them. Mr. Van Kleek opened his window and asked what they were doing there. The man on the stoop said his companions were trying to rob him and that he wanted protection. Just at this juncture, George See, the Chief of Police of the village, came up and got the men away from the rectory. A young man named G. Faulkner, who was returning to his home, turned another gang away from the front door of the bank, which he supposed they were going to enter. Yesterday morning four White Plains roughs, named Thomas Birmingham, John Haley, Thomas Anderson, and Benjamin Dingwell, all pretty drunk, having been out, it was said, all night with the Kensico rioters, entered the saloon of Charles Hatfield, on Orawanpum-street, and there assaulted a young colored man named Joseph Kinduide. Birmingham, Haley, and Anderson were arrested and locked up in the county jail.

STRUCK BY AN ENGINE BUT NOT KILLED.

The passenger who alighted from the Peekskill special train at Sing Sing on Tuesday evening and told a story of a remarkable escape from death, which was published in THE TIMES on Wednesday, saw yesterday Patrick Boylan, engineer of locomotive No. 61, on the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad. The passenger said that the accuracy of his story having been impugned, he would like to have the engineer's version of it. "Why," said he, "do you suppose I am blind that I can't see a man when he is on the tracks right in front of my headlight? Why, I am willing to swear that man was struck by my engine, as told by you in the paper, and, Sir, he shot right up in the air at least 30 feet, with both his arms extended. Just come here and I'll show you the proof of what I am telling you," and he led the passenger to the front of the locomotive, and pointed with pride to the right side of the cross-beam, where the varnished paint looked as though a piece of emery-paper had been hastily drawn over it, scratching it a little. That abrasion was not there when the locomotive started from the Grand Central Depot, and it was there when it arrived at Yonkers. Conductor Calkins, who ran the 5:40 on Tuesday evening, said yesterday that he had no doubt his engineer had struck the tramp, but that by good luck he was not hurt much. To be sure, said he, it seems incredible, but that does not disprove it. The appearance of the man as he was being assisted to the station was that of a person who had been roughly tossed to the side of the road.

REFORM IN THE EXCISE OFFICE.

The Board of Excise met yesterday, and at the suggestion of Commissioner Friedsam, a plan was adopted to thwart the rascally sharpers who for a long time have fleeced applicants for licenses with impunity. An applicant had to run the gantlet in Mulberry and Houston streets, and on the two floors of the Excise Office, of a lot of fellows who tried to induce him to visit the notaries who have offices in liquor stores in the neighborhood. These worthies fleeced the applicant out of what they could induce him to pay for filling out an application blank, and then he was requested to subscribe for one of Kelly's newspapers as the representation that no Excise Inspector or policeman would deal harshly with a liquor-dealer who showed the receipt for a subscription to either of the papers in question. Yesterday the Chief Clerk was directed to inform his subscribers that applications blanks must only be issued to the applicants themselves, and that if requested, the clerks in the Excise Office should fill out such blanks, which will be sworn to before one of the Commissioners. If there is a pressure of business a Commissioner may permit responsible deputies to convey desks to the Excise Office. They will not be permitted to charge more than 25 cents for each application that passes through their hands.

HELP FOR ORPHANS AND THE AGED

RECEPTIONS AT TWO PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL INSTITUTIONS—REPORTS READ.

The every-day quiet of the modest little brick Home for Old Men and Aged Couples at No. 457 Hudson-street was pleasantly varied yesterday afternoon by a reception to the friends of the institution. The people arrived at 3 o'clock, and after listening to the addresses and readings of reports sat down to a dinner. Aged people who were strong enough to leave their beds received the visitors, thanking them separately for donations received during the year. Bishop Potter, the President, was unable to be present, and his place was filled by the Rev. Dr. Isaac H. Tuttle. The Trustees, in presenting their annual report, expressed their gratitude to the friends for their pecuniary support and their kind encouragement and gentle sympathy to the aged inmates. This Home was founded in 1872. While St. Luke's afforded a refuge for aged Christian women, there was no place under church influences open to receive old men, or where an aged couple could passs their declining years together. It was also desired to extend a home to those who had once been prosperous, and while so unfortunate as to lose their property still retained their good names. Since then the Home has prospered, notwithstanding the many difficulties arising from the peculiar nature of the work. Since the beginning of the year 11 persons have been admitted. Admission was refused to those whose bodily infirmities were so serious as to require the attention given to a hospital. The finances are in good condition, and the gifts received during the year were numerous. The Home is entirely dependent upon contributions for its maintenance. The admission fee of $350 is placed in a permanent fund, which is not used for current expenses. This fund now amounts to about $15,000. When the reading of the report was finished Dr. Tuttle again expressed gratitude for the liberal support given to the Home, and added that its success was remarkable. Addresses were also delivered by the Rev. Dr. Tuttle Smith, the Rev. Mr. Backus, of the Holy Apostles' Protestant Episcopal Church; the Rev. Dr. Brown, of St. John's Chapel, and the Rev. Mr. Appleton, a retired clergyman. A choir from St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church sang several hymns. Among the ladies and gentlemen present were: Hermann H. Cammann, Thomas F. Cummings, Lloyd W. Wells, William A. Duncan, Mrs. Eugene Dutilh, Mrs. Morgan Dix, Mrs. Augustus H. Ward, Mrs. W. H. Bradford, Mrs. Julian Botts, Mrs. Joshua Thompson, Mrs. Alfred Ogden, Mrs. E. N. Dickerson, Mrs. Hiram Young, Mrs. Samuel Carey, Mrs. G. S. Schermerhorn, Miss E. C. Brennan, Miss Emily Beach, Mrs. Elizabeth H. Howard, Miss Clara Fanshaw, Miss M. E. Palmer, Mrs. Simon Brasher, Miss M. Gunn, Miss Kate Comstock, Miss M. Morgan, and Miss Margaret Richards.

The children of the Protestant Half Orphan Asylum, at Tenth-street and Sixth-avenue, treated their friends and guests yesterday afternoon to a pleasant reception. The institution was founded in 1836. It now supports nearly 200 children, and, judging from their appearance, the printed bill of fare and the expense account for clothing, they are well cared for. The reception on the first floor was reserved yesterday for the exercises. The boys and girls were dressed in their best, and recited their parts and sang with much success. The report of the managers, which was read during an intermission in the entertainment, showed that a large sum had been given to the asylum. They wished they could enumerate the many instances which came to their notice during the last year to encourage the work, but that was not possible. It was a great satisfaction to know that the children were well cared for and well taught. During the last year 27 children were sent West. In the Summer the Superintendent of the sitting-room visited them and found them happy and improved in every way. This experience led the managers to believe that, as a general rule, the welfare, improvement, and prospects of the children are advanced by finding homes for them with the agricultural class in the Western States. The past year was one of unusual healthfulness in the asylum. The appearance of scarlet fever at one time caused much anxiety, but the prompt and the requirements were well met. The children had been taken on frequent excursions to Coney Island during the Summer. Many of the parents showed an appreciation of the benefits their children received.

DIPHTHERIA IN BROOKLYN.

SIX HUNDRED CASES IN A MONTH—DEFECTIVE PLUMBING ONE CAUSE.

Diphtheria still continues to claim a good many victims in Brooklyn, although the Board of Health of that city have adopted every means within reach to prevent the spread of the disease. During the month of November 591 cases were reported, 220 of which terminated fatally. Up to date, during the present month, 545 cases have been reported, 108 of which have had a fatal termination. Defective plumbing, it is believed, has much to do with the continued prevalence of the disease. A report made to the Board of Health by the Board of City Works yesterday morning assigns this, in the opinion of Sanitary Superintendent Raymond, to be the principal cause for the epidemic. The fact is stated that out of 12,620 manhole covers in the city 9,658 have solid covers. The sewers are therefore not properly ventilated, and when the tide rises the poisonous gases, which should escape through the perforated manhole covers into the open air, are forced into the connections of the private houses.

The following letter from J. B. Elliott, of No. 498 Clinton-avenue, will serve as a specimen of many that are sent to the Board of Health daily: "I trust you will urge with all possible force the necessity of giving outside relief to our city drainage. I am about repairing leaks in my cellar drain-pipes, and it is frightful to notice the pressure and escape of gas from the main in the street hissing through the smallest opening in the joints of the drain-pipe inside. It was a great oversight in the state that no provision was made in our sewerage system for the escape of gases from the mains. Our first duty now is to remedy the evil. After, it will be time to discuss other means, if necessary, to prevent the spread of diphtheria or other malignant diseases in our city." The Health authorities are of opinion that diphtheria will speedily vanish if the solid iron covers of the manholes are replaced by perforated covers.

THE FULTON MARKET SHEDS.

JUDGE VAN BRUNT'S ORDER EFFECTUALLY CARRIED OUT YESTERDAY.

Shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon the truck of Hook and Ladder Company No. 10 was driven up to the front of Fulton Market, and a few minutes later Inspector of Buildings William H. Esterbrook appeared, accompanied by his deputy, and the work of demolishing the unsafe sheds encircling the market was begun on the Beekman-street side, under virtue of Judge Van Brunt's order. The crowd of idlers and market people seemed to realize for the first time that they were to be interfered with, and there was a general scurrying about to remove their wares to a place of safety, while the most violent indignation was expressed against the action of the City authorities. Butchers and other legitimate marketmen, on the contrary, were filled with rejoicing. They asserted that for years past they have been so hemmed in that they have been prevented from properly displaying their wares, and their business has suffered accordingly. Capt. Reilly, of the hook and ladder company, and 18 of his men, armed with hatchets and fire-hooks, soon littered the pavement with rotted planks and beams. A great crowd, which temporarily rendered traffic impossible, gathered in the adjoining streets, and encouraged them with facetious remarks. By 3 o'clock Beekman and Front streets had been cleared and the firemen turned their attention to the Fulton-street side, which they effectually disposed of long before dark. A swarm of ragged women and children pounced upon the débris as it fell and carried it away in all directions without molestation.

THE SEIDENBERG FAILURE.

Among members of the tobacco trade the utmost surprise continued to be manifested yesterday at the failure of Seidenberg & Co., which took place on Wednesday afternoon. No further information as to the amount of the firm's liabilities could be obtained. Mr. Seidenberg saying that it would be impossible for him to make a full statement for some weeks. The liabilities are estimated not to exceed $300,000, and at one of the commercial agencies it was reported to be the general opinion that the firm would pay dollar for dollar; that they had suspended just as soon as they saw that their creditors were to be injured if they continued in business, and before it became impossible for them to see their way clearly to an honorable and satisfactory settlement. The course of the firm was regarded in the trade as an indication of their entire honesty and desire to treat their creditors—most of whom are Havana firms—with fairness and frankness.

M., beginning on Monday next with the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Assembly District Supervisors. A young man named Peckham, who was returning to his home, turned another gang away from the front door of the bank, which he supposed they were going to enter. Yesterday morning four White Plains roughs, named Thomas Birmingham, John Haley, Thomas Anderson, and Benjamin Dingwell, all pretty drunk, having been out, it was said, all night with the Kensico rioters, entered the saloon of Charles Hatfield, on Orawanpum-street, and there assaulted a young colored man named Joseph Kinduide. Birmingham, Haley, and Anderson were arrested and locked up in the county jail. The Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Districts will be paid off; on Wednesday those from the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Districts, and on Thursday those from the remaining districts. Benjamin E. Merritt, of New-Castle, has a very eccentric boarder at his house named Joseph Harris, who went there in April, 1879. Since that time he has imprisoned himself in a dark room, and refuses to speak to any one, making known his wants by writing. He keeps a little spirit-lamp burning, and spends most of his time in bed and reads the morning papers regularly by the light of his spirit-lamp. He is about 40 years old, and has been pronounced incurably insane by Dr. Hammond and by Dr. Choate. He has a wife and daughter living in this City, the former supporting the entire family by singing in church choirs.

Judge Gilbert, at a General Term of the Supreme Court, held at the Court-house, Brooklyn, Kings County, after hearing Isaac N. Mills, of counsel for the appellants, and Martin J. Keogh, of counsel for the respondents, has reversed the order of Judge Gifford, with $10 costs.
